TCI luxury real estate shows resilience amid global uncertainty

– median prices surge despite lower sales, as new developments bring optimism

South Bank sits on Long Bay Beach, featuring modern villas, a marina, and a 'boat concierge', emerging as one of Provo's top spots

BY DELANA ISLES

The second quarter real estate market report for the Turks and Caicos Islands highlights a period of adjustment and renewed optimism, with the luxury market demonstrating both resilience and adaptability in the face of global economic headwinds.

This is demonstrated in the 2025 quarter report from The Agency Turks & Caicos shared this week. The report shows that for listings and sales, there was a modest dip, reflecting short-term caution.

Grace Bay Resorts

The latest data reveals a slight decrease in market activity. New residential listings fell by 1.75% year-over-year, dropping from 228 in Q2 2024 to 224 in Q2 2025. Sold listings experienced a steeper decline of 36.92%, with 82 total sales, underscoring a period of short-term cooling attributed largely to international market uncertainties.

Total sales volume reached $127.4 million for the quarter, a 40.27% decrease compared to the previous year. Notably, only two transactions exceeded the $5 million mark during Q2 2025, reflecting a temporary moderation in high-value sales.

Despite these declines, The Agency said there remains a bright spot in the market: the median sales price climbed sharply to $950,000, a substantial 52% increase from Q2 2024. This surge is attributed to strong demand for mid-range properties such as Seascape Townhomes and South Bank Boathouses. The average sale price across all categories, however, saw a 5.31% drop, settling at $1.55 million, signaling an ongoing market correction after years of rapid growth.

They said the eastern end of Providenciales remains a standout, accounting for 51% of all sales, particularly along the North Shore from Turtle Cove to Leeward. While these sought-after areas continue to drive market value, districts like Chalk Sound and Silly Creek are also presenting new value opportunities for buyers, especially those seeking properties with rental appeal.

The Agency noted that a major highlight this quarter is the groundbreaking of three significant development projects: The Retreat in Grace Bay, Lunar Beach in Blue Hills, and Navah in North West Point. They said these projects are seen as affirmations of continued investor confidence and belief in the long-term growth prospects of the islands.

Sean O'Neill, Managing Partner of The Agency Turks & Caicos, expressed optimism about the future: "Even as market activity moderates due to broader global factors, the future of Turks & Caicos real estate remains exceedingly bright. The groundbreaking of these transformative developments illustrates the unwavering belief in the potential of our Islands. While today may feel cloudy, the sun is clearly shining ahead."

Outlook for the Remainder of 2025

Looking forward, the report reflects cautious optimism for the remainder of 2025. It said rising activity in June, paired with sustained interest in luxury properties, suggests the market is poised for stabilisation and renewed growth.

The ongoing influx of tourism and investment continues to bolster confidence in the Turks and Caicos Islands as a premier destination for luxury real estate.

Dead man found in Blue Hills ditch

– violent kidnapping and murder suspected

Police have launched an investigation into the discovery of a man's body last Saturday, July 5.

Around 5:06 pm, a call was made to the Police Control Room, informing officers of a body seen in some bushes in Blue Hills, along Millennium Highway in Providenciales.

Officers and medical personnel were immediately dispatched to the given location along Miracle Close and discovered the lifeless body of a male.

According to news correspondent Eagle Legal News, who was on the scene, they are investigating reports that a couple was beaten, kidnapped, and the male was shot multiple times in the body, not far from where police discovered the deceased man. According to the news correspondent, the male was taken from his home by gunmen the night before police found the dead man.

Police have not pronounced on these reports. They said only that efforts are underway to confirm the identity of the deceased. Once an identification has been made, the next of kin will be notified in accordance with standard procedures, police informed.

Police are urging the public to contact the nearest police station, call 911, or reach the Serious Crime Unit at 231-1842 to submit any information about this incident anonymously. Or call Crime Stoppers at 1-800-8477, and individuals are encouraged to download the Crime Stoppers P3 app to share information. (DELANA ISLES)

Appellate court upholds Hall and Greene convictions, amends sentencing

– Neither will serve time in prison

BY DELANA ISLES

Floyd Hall

Clayton Greene

President of the Court of Appeal, Mrs Justice Alice Yorke-Soo and her panel of judges have ruled that corruption accused Floyd Hall and Clayton Greene will not serve prison time, having suspended their one-year and six months 2023 sentences for two years.

In a written judgement released on Thursday, July 10, the appellate court dismissed the appeal against the men's convictions, ruling that the judge did not err in arriving at her verdict on September 25, 2023.

However, they found that the men's sentences should have been suspended at the date of sentencing, October 12, 2023, under the rules of the Suspended Sentencing Ordinance (SSO). Chief Justice (CJ) Mabel Agyemang presided over the men's new trial, following the death of the first trial judge in 2021.

Reached for comment on the appellate court's decision, Prosecutor Andrew Mitchell KC told the Turks and Caicos Weekly News on Thursday morning: "We are still considering the judgment which is full and detailed and as prosecutors we are neither pleased nor unhappy as it is our role to present the facts and law to the Court without fear or favour and respect court findings."

The Appellate Court President stated: "We do not fault the Learned CJ's generous reduction of the sentences of both appellants in light of the breach of their right to a trial within a reasonable time. It was a way to remedy the breach and the Learned CJ fulfilled her promise to give a reduced sentence if the appellants were found guilty as a remedy."

The court said that some 14 years after the commission of the offences, having imposed sentences which are eligible for suspension under the SSO, and where they found that there were factors militating against immediate custody, "we think that it would be just and appropriate to suspend the sentences".

Significantly, the court upheld the appellant's arguments that "the court and the prosecution contributed to the delay".

Further to that point, the court observed that if Mr. Greene's sentence is not suspended, despite his "exemplary character" and the assertion that he derived no personal gain from the offence, he will be required to serve a term of imprisonment immediately.

"Thirdly, 14 years is a long time to have this matter hanging over their heads," President Yorke-Soo asserted. "And if they were to appeal the orders of this court, it would mean that the threat of immediate imprisonment would continue to torture them.

Fourthly, she continued, "it is our view that the public interest in this matter does not affirmatively require immediate imprisonment after such a lengthy delay. In all the circumstances, immediate imprisonment in our view would not be just and appropriate."

The law the court relied on in suspending the men's sentences - Section 3 of the Suspended Sentencing Ordinance Cap. 3.04 (SSO) - provides that "a court which passes a sentence of imprisonment for a term of not more than two years for an offence may, subject to subsection (3), order that the sentence shall not take effect, unless during a period specified in the order, the offender commits in the Islands another offence punishable with imprisonment and thereafter a court having power to do so orders under section 4 that the original sentence shall take effect."

This, the appellate court stipulated, should have been the original sentence.

CONFISCATION ORDERS

The court has upheld the confiscation orders made against Hall and Greene with significant variations and instructions for future courts to consider when imposing such orders.

The court made a confiscation order in respect of Hall in the sum of $1,181,528

plus interest with an adjusted date of October 12, 2023 to present. This sum includes Greene's benefit of $413,369 (after adjustments for inflation)."

The court said if the full sum is recovered from Hall, the state would recover it twice over if it were to recover also from Greene, "which would be disproportionate and wrong, as he has not profited or retained the benefit".

"Accordingly, we will apply a proviso in respect of the sum to be recovered from Greene. Save for applying a proviso in our view Greene has not shown any other reason why it would be disproportionate to order the sum of $413,369 to be recovered from him," the court found.

The amount of $413,369 along with interest accruing from October 12, 2023 to the present, is subject to confiscation from Greene. However, enforcement of this order will not proceed insofar as this amount has already been recovered through the satisfaction of the confiscation order issued against Hall.

ADVICE FOR JUDGES

The court advises that written reasons ought to be provided after every confiscation hearing.

It explained: "In R v Aujla [2008] EWCA Crim 637, Coulson JA stated at [28]:

[28] ...This is one of a number of confiscation cases recently before this court where the original ruling was given in a very informal manner without any clear reasons or conclusions.

"We consider that the provision of a reasoned judgment in an application for a confiscation order is not only good practice but a necessary element of this legislation. Any court making a confiscation order should set out clearly whether or not the statutory assumptions are being accepted or rejected and how and why the relevant findings and conclusions have been reached.

"We are aware that this imposes yet further burdens on the judges themselves. But in our view the complex nature of this legislation, the large sums that are often involved, and the potentially devastating consequences of an order for a defendant, make such a requirement imperative," the Appellate Court advised.

The full appeals panel included Hon Mr. Justice Turner, J.A. and Hon Mr Justice Hylton, KC, JA. Appearances for the appellants: Jerome Lynch KC, Mr Kayode Smith and Jahmal Missick for Floyd Basil Hall. Richard Bendall and Kishanta Hall for Clayton Stanfield Greene. Andrew Mitchell KC, Quinn Hawkins, Katherine Duncan, Enjaleek Dickenson and Neelam Gomersall for the respondent.

TCI INTEGRITY COMMISSION

The Turks and Caicos Islands Integrity Commission (IC) is facing intense scrutiny and demands for reform following a scathing independent review by Crest Advisory.

During a parliamentary session on Tuesday, July 1, 2025, Deputy Speaker Hon Jameka Williams moved a private member's motion for a debate on the report.

Williams criticised the report's framing of the IC's origins, stating, "It says that the integrity commission was set up because of the 2009 Sir Robin Auld's report into corruption. But the truth is, the law was created in 2008, more than a year before the Sir Robin Auld report came out."

She also expressed strong reservations about recommendations that would centralise power, asserting, "What's worse, Mr Speaker, is that the Crest report doesn't only call for fixing that problem, it actually suggests that we give the commission more power, Mr Speaker that goes against the law and the Constitution and what it's intended to do."

Furthermore, Williams highlighted what she perceives as undue influence from the Governor's office, emphasising, "When the commission no longer directs the activities carried out in its name and when the activities are being shaped by the Office of the Governor, we no longer have an independent institution. We have a compromised one."

Hon Akeirra Misick, Member for Leeward and Long Bay, echoed concerns about the IC's evolution, noting how it transformed into a "monster" in public perception due to intrusive disclosure forms that made "a lot of people wary about trying to serve at this level."

Leader of the Opposition, Hon Edwin Astwood, called for clarity on the review's objectives and stated, "I do believe that none but Turks and Caicos islanders should be commissioners on the Integrity Commission Board, Mr Speaker."

This parliamentary debate marks a crucial moment for the IC, as lawmakers seek to balance accountability with individual rights and restore public trust.

WHAT ARE YOUR THOUGHTS?

Deputy Speaker Hon Jameka Williams

Nuanced history

It is curious that the PNP backbenches are finally "finding their voice" over a matter that was established and designed to combat "corruption among public officials in the Turks and Caicos Islands". Between 2003 and 2009, the then PNP government was accused of committing serious acts of public corruption. The fallout included a constitutional suspension of three years, a declaration of systemic corruption, the loss of ministerial powers, ministers being reduced to civil servants, and the imposition of an Integrity Commission.

We may also thank the PNP government of 2003–2009 for setting these islands back to a constitutional framework akin to that of the 1950s and 1960s, where ministers must ask for permission to undertake certain massive projects. The Integrity Commission carries a most jaundiced and nuanced history because it is known for "going after native Turks and Caicos Islanders only", while leaving the "others" alone to do their mischief throughout the 2012–2025 period.

It is supposed to "police" and weed out corruption in the islands among public officials, yet certain institutions remain under intense public scrutiny. The debate about gaining the public's trust is not solely about the Integrity Commission—which has its faults—but also about elected officials, where allegations of corruption still abound even after 16 years of constitutional interruption and return.

Allegations from 2024 to 2025 suggest that Cabinet approved land purchases at three times their value, without an independent market valuation.

Redundant

Let's face it: there would be no Integrity Commission in the Turks and Caicos Islands had there not been a corrupt PNP government between 2003 and 2009, ruling with complete and total impunity—with the tacit aid of the British government. In hindsight, it seems they were being set up to "go too far," setting the stage for the UK government to suspend the constitution and begin a gradual takeover of the TCI.

Between 2009 and 2025, there has been what many perceive as a wholesale transfer of wealth, land, and opportunity from the native TCI community to the expat community and the so-called "Grace Bay mafia." The Integrity Commission, along with UK and Canadian Commissioners of Police, was installed to ensure that any complaint of corruption involving native islanders was pursued—even when the grounds seemed frivolous.

To my knowledge, this Integrity Commission never pursued any UK or other non-TCI official during this period. In response, Caribbean governments from places such as Miami, The Bahamas, Barbados and Guyana would be wise to resist enacting Integrity Commission laws—not to shield corruption, but to avoid replicating the TCI's experience, where enforcement appears biased and selective.

The legacy of the Commission on the TCI has been troubling. It has, in practice, created a "government within a government." Reforms are needed. As the Leader of the Opposition has rightly stated, there is a need for clarity. That may be the only truly sensible voice to emerge from this debate. Other voices appear more concerned with ensuring the Commission is not empowered to investigate them.

Now that an Integrity Commission exists, "the milk is spilt," and elected officials must learn to police themselves and their colleagues. The unfortunate reality is that the imposition of such a body was itself a reaction to a government defined by systemic corruption. Not ideal circumstances—but it is our reality, born from the failure of the 2003–2009 PNP administration to govern with restraint and accountability.

TCI charts course for resilient financial future amidst climate concerns

HE Governor Dileeni Daniel-Selvaratnam, joined several industry experts on a panel discussion at the Financial Services Commission Annual Industry Conference

BY OLIVIA ROSE

The Turks and Caicos Islands Financial Services Commission's (FSC) Annual Industry Meeting 2025, held recently at The Ritz-Carlton, was a powerful declaration of the territory's commitment to building a resilient, inclusive, and forward-looking financial system.

Under the theme "Collaborating for Transformational Change: Embracing Innovation to Support the Future of the Turks and Caicos Financial Services Industry", leaders emphasised financial services as a traditional engine of economic sustainability, particularly in response to escalating global climate challenges affecting the vital tourism sector.

HE Governor Dileeni Daniel-Selvaratnam underscored the critical role of financial services in achieving the TCI 2040 Vision—a bipartisan blueprint for the islands' sustainable future.

"Global warming is a very real thing that is going to be affecting our tourism sector," Governor Daniel-Selvaratnam stated, "and I think financial services will play a critical role—not just as a supplementary sector, but really a traditional engine in facilitating the sustainability of our economy. If you look at the direct financial foreign investment that we will need, particularly in industries such as renewable energy, Agrotech, and FinTech, we will need robust frameworks that are adapted to be able to facilitate that trade. And so, the Financial Services Commission needs to be agile in how it secures that business to flow in."

The discussion highlighted the

More teeth

Instead of public officials calling the Integrity Commission to account—when they themselves require its oversight—there is a clear need for the Commission to have more teeth and greater power to do its job.

An amendment to the Integrity Commission Ordinance is now necessary, one that would empower the body to address conflicts of interest without needing to rely on the Court. These are areas where the law demands reform. But will this government, which appears to benefit from the current weaknesses in the Commission's framework, actually enact changes that would give the Integrity Commission the authority it needs to properly police those in office?

Silent backbench

This is one of the most silent and non-functional backbenches in the history of the TCI—perhaps even globally. With a lopsided parliamentary majority of 16–3, this PNP backbench has shown little curiosity about how the country is being run and managed by the Premier and his ministers—except when it comes to protecting themselves from the "expat police," organisations like the Integrity Commission.

On any other serious matter affecting the people of the TCI, the PNP backbench is silent as lambs and appears to be in collusion with the Premier, supporting any "anti-TCI" measure he brings forward. They have become a rubber stamp, conveniently ignoring their role—first and foremost, to act in the interest of the people and oppose any government proposals that negatively impact them.

Their issue with the Integrity Commission stems from the fact that it must investigate their public acts and functions. This vitriolic attack on the Commission—an entity essentially created to police the PNP—is, at its core, a self-serving debate. Not one backbencher has raised concern about the projects involving governing ministers that ought to draw the attention of both the Commission and backbenchers themselves.

They are allowing the government to get away with proverbial murder—yet they say nothing. The debate launched by these PNP backbenchers reveals misplaced anger. As public servants, they should be demanding laws and rules that ensure proper oversight over elected officials, ministers, MPs, and the Office of the Premier—not opposing proposals designed to give the Integrity Commission stronger powers to hold them accountable.

It is embarrassing to witness elected representatives looking after their own interests rather than those of the people. Let it be clear: it is in the public interest to have an entity like the Integrity Commission equipped with more teeth and authority to investigate ministers and public officials. Ministers cannot be a law—or a lord—unto themselves.

Accountability and control

The recent parliamentary debate surrounding the Turks and Caicos Islands Integrity Commission (IC) lays bare the uncomfortable tension between accountability and control. What began as a body designed to safeguard public trust is now under intense scrutiny—not simply for its performance, but for what it has come to represent.

The Crest Advisory report has served as a catalyst, sparking a barrage of criticism from lawmakers who feel the Commission has strayed from its purpose. Deputy Speaker Jameka Williams was unequivocal: framing the IC as a reactionary body born out of the 2009 Auld report does a disservice to its legislative history. Indeed, the 2008 Integrity Commission Ordinance predates the Auld findings. But her deeper concern reveals a broader theme—that the Commission is gathering powers that may exceed its constitutional bounds.

This is not simply a technical dispute. Williams and others argue the Commission is losing its independence, allegedly influenced by the Governor's office. That sentiment was echoed by Hon Akeirra Misick, who painted a portrait of public discomfort, describing the Commission as a "monster" created by forms and demands so intrusive that potential public servants are turned away before they even step forward.

What's emerging is a growing disconnect between oversight and representation. The Commission, by design, is meant to be a watchdog, not a barrier to service, nor an instrument of external control. Hon Edwin Astwood's plea for Turks and Caicos islanders alone to sit on the Commission board may sound nationalistic, but it signals an important desire for community-led accountability, not distant governance.

At this juncture, reform is not just a political imperative—it's a civic one. The IC must be strengthened, yes, but within clearly defined guardrails. Greater transparency about its powers, safeguards against overreach, and a renewed commitment to impartiality are essential. If the Commission is to fulfill its promise, it cannot be seen as a gatekeeper—it must be seen as a cornerstone of democratic integrity.

The stakes are high: integrity cannot be compromised, but neither can trust. Turks and Caicos needs both.

TCI "late to the party"

– Banker calls for urgent re-evaluation of TCI's financial identity and strategic niche

Mr Kenrick Walters, General Manager and a Director of Bordier Bank Turks and Caicos

BY OLIVIA ROSE

The Turks and Caicos Islands are at a critical juncture, facing the uncomfortable truth that their financial services sector may be "too late to the party" in competing with established global powerhouses.

This stark assessment came from Mr Kenrick Walters, General Manager and a Director of Bordier Bank Turks and Caicos, during the recent Financial Services Commission's Annual Industry Meeting 2025.

Walters issued a compelling call to action, urging the territory to abandon aspirations of emulating larger financial centres and instead forge a unique identity, marketing itself as a "package deal" to discerning investors.

The banker minced no words in his assessment of TCI's current standing and the futility of chasing unrealistic benchmarks. "Let's face it, right? We are not Cayman. We're probably never going to be the Cayman Islands. We're not going to be Bermuda, we're not going to be Singapore, even though, you know, it is often said that we're aspiring to become like those jurisdictions. But realistically, that's never going to happen, right? We're just too late to the party, right?" he stated unequivocally.

He stressed that this direct challenge underscores the urgent need for a strategic pivot, away from imitation and towards differentiation.

The core of Walters' argument lies in the perceived lack of a defined identity for TCI's financial sector.

He argued that "one of the biggest challenges that we face right now is we really don't have an identity, right? Who are we? What do we have to offer to access financial services or to invest in Turks and Caicos, and that, I think, is something that we have to begin to give serious attention to, but we really need to think about who we are, what is our identity?," he implored.

Instead of trying to perfect individual financial products already mastered elsewhere, Walters proposed a more holistic approach: selling the Turks and Caicos Islands as an attractive, comprehensive "packaged deal."

He highlighted the inherent advantages of the islands that can be "bolted on to the product package.

"We have wonderful beaches, you know, we use the US Dollar as a currency. We have proximity to the United States, well, to the North American markets," he noted.

Beyond the obvious, Walters emphasised the need to promote less tangible, yet equally crucial, governmental efficiencies and a sensible immigration policy.

He emphasised the importance of maintaining a clean, green, and safe environment, alongside having an efficient and responsive government. As examples of good governance, he cited the streamlining of business licences and work permit approvals, and stressed the need for a practical, well-balanced immigration policy—all of which contribute to the country's appeal through administrative agility.

Ultimately, Walters stressed that defining this unique appeal requires a unified, multi-stakeholder effort, culminating in concrete action.

"I think the secret for Turks and Caicos, in a way that makes the jurisdiction appeal for the investor, who already has a smorgasbord of choices out there right now, is obviously a multifaceted approach to stakeholder engagement that's where the opportunities lie", he said.

His call to action was particularly sharp, pushing for accountability and results beyond mere discussion. "I think we need to be able to articulate the vision for this. I think we need to be able to formulate the strategy around this, we need to be able to facilitate this, and this is why I'm really happy that we have a forum like this where we can do that. I think we need to call people to action, right? Because too often we hear people talk about these things year in, year out, and nothing actually happens.

He continued: "So we need to call people and organisations and institutions to action", Walters concluded, challenging the TCI to move beyond rhetoric and translate discussion into tangible progress.

His remarks serve as a critical wake-up call for the Turks and Caicos Islands to define its unique value proposition and aggressively pursue a strategic niche in the competitive global financial landscape.

HMS MEDWAY returns to Grand Turk for disaster response exercise

The British Royal Navy vessel, HMS Medway, is now docked (Royal Navy photo)

The British Royal Navy vessel HMS Medway is currently docked at the Grand Turk Cruise Centre, following its arrival on Friday, July 4. This annual deployment serves to provide support to the territory throughout the Atlantic Hurricane season and to enhance regional preparedness initiatives.

Notably, HMS Medway also actively supports counter-narcotics efforts across the region, regularly conducting joint operations with United States authorities to disrupt the illegal drug trade. The vessel sports advanced capabilities and state-of-the-art surveillance equipment that support its patrol and prevention operations.

HMS Medway also delivers humanitarian relief to British Overseas Territories and neighbouring nations in times of crisis.

As part of this visit, the Crisis Response Troop on board HMS Medway will carry out a simulated beach landing exercise and joint training with the Turks and Caicos Islands Regiment, supporting the ongoing commitment to develop capability, the Governor's Office announced.

HE Governor Dileeni Daniel-Selvaratnam said: "I welcome HMS Medway's return to patrol in the territorial waters of the Turks and Caicos Islands as part of its enduring commitment to regional security, international cooperation and humanitarian assistance. This further visit highlights the strong and growing partnership between the ship's company and the TCI Regiment, as we work to build capability, safeguard our territorial waters and enhance regional stability."

Almost 200 irregular migrants intercepted in TCI waters

The Royal Turks and Caicos Islands Police Force (RTCIPF) Marine Branch intercepts a vessel carrying 194 irregular migrants on July 5, 2025 (Photo: RTCIPF)

In a dramatic late-night interception, marine units of the Royal Turks and Caicos Islands Police Force (RTCIPF) successfully apprehended an illegal vessel carrying 194 irregular migrants, including 38 women, on Saturday, July 5, 2025.

The swift action prevented what could have been a perilous landing and underscored the ongoing challenge of illegal migration in TCI waters.

At approximately 9:57 pm, the Marine Operations Centre alerted officers on board the Sea Pursuit and Sea Contender to an unidentified vessel. The Marine Branch quickly located the 50-foot boat, powered by two outboard engines.

Following a successful interception, a headcount revealed 194 individuals aboard: 156 males and 38 females.

According to a statement from the Royal Turks and Caicos Islands Police Force, additional units, including tactical officers and officers from the partner agency Border Force, were immediately deployed to assist with the operation. The coordinated effort ensured the safe docking of the vessel and the secure disembarkation of all individuals.

The 194 irregular migrants were subsequently transported to the Detention Centre for processing.

The RTCIPF continues to urge the public to report any information regarding illegal entry into the TCI by contacting their nearest police station, 911, the Serious Crime Unit at 231-1842, or Crime Stoppers anonymously at 1-800-8477.

The public is also encouraged to download the Crime Stoppers P3 app to share information anonymously.

imperative of innovation across emerging sectors including renewable energy, Agrotech, and FinTech.

The FSC is poised to enhance regulatory agility, build capacity, and foster international expertise, while the government is committed to investing in digital literacy and continuous education to uplift the local workforce.

A cornerstone of this forward-thinking approach is the planned establishment of a regulatory sandbox, designed to support innovative business models by allowing earlier engagement with regulatory bodies.

Governor Daniel-Selvaratnam further elaborated on the necessity of embracing risk and adaptability in this evolving landscape.

"I think the key thing we need to embrace—it is the key to success and actually the key to survival—is that we need to become comfortable with risk. There is opportunity in risk," she explained.

"And I think that's why the [regulatory] sandbox is such a really good way forward. We don't know what we're dealing with… what we're going to have to do is be agile and open to the propositions that are going to come to us."

Her remarks signalled a proactive shift towards understanding and integrating novel financial products, referencing a recent discussion with Finnish investors exploring carbon credits and forestry.

"I think the discussions were that they were sort of shopping around the region to work out where they would invest, where they would set up… we have to enable ourselves to understand what the product is."

This unified vision from the highest levels of governance and regulation marks a turning point for the Turks and Caicos Islands, which is determined to adapt, innovate, and secure its economic future by diversifying beyond traditional sectors such as tourism and actively fostering a dynamic financial services industry.

Five Cays man charged in firearm and ammunition bust

A targeted police operation in the Five Cays area has led to the arrest and charging of a 19-year-old man in connection with the unlawful possession of a firearm and ammunition.

The Royal Turks and Caicos Islands Police Force (RTCIPF) announced today that Keanu Tajay Wilson, of Sandbar Street, Five Cays, faces multiple charges following the significant seizure.

On Thursday, June 26, 2025, officers from the RTCIPF Serious Crime Unit executed an intelligence-driven operation that resulted in the recovery of a handgun, a magazine, and eight rounds of 9mm ammunition.

This successful recovery underscores the force's unwavering commitment to dismantling threats posed by illegal weapons within our communities.

The Royal Turk and Caicos Islands Police Force confirmed in a recent statement, that Mr Wilson has been formally charged with two counts of Unlawful Possession of a Firearm and one count of Unlawful Possession of Ammunition.

He is currently in custody and is expected to appear before the Magistrates' Court in the coming days to answer to these charges.

Acting Commissioner of Police, Mr Rodney Adams, emphasised the importance of the operation's outcome, stating, "Each firearm seized represents a significant step toward reducing the risk of gun-related harm to our citizens. I commend the officers for their vigilance and professionalism throughout this operation. The Force remains steadfast in its mission to ensure the safety of all residents, and I extend my gratitude to the public for their ongoing cooperation in supporting our efforts to maintain law and order."

The RTCIPF continues its resolute mandate to uphold public safety and reduce violent crime. The Force encourages anyone with information related to illegal firearms or other suspicious activity to contact Crime Stoppers at 1-800-8477 or their nearest police station, highlighting that community support and partnership remain a positive step in the right direction. (OLIVIA ROSE)

It should be more than the bottom line

Remember the people, processes and values in the middle

BY DREXWELL SEYMOUR

INTRODUCTION

In the private sector, success is frequently evaluated based on net profit margins and returns to shareholders. Mind you, these indicators do matter; however, our relentless pursuit of these outcomes sometimes overlook the people, processes and values in the middle.

I am talking from personal experience. As a former CEO of Cable & Wireless, the truth is, it was the bottom line that mattered. You were under a lot of pressure from the top to deliver some bottom-line numbers despite the competitive and economic pressures, and if you do not meet your targets, your performance is in jeopardy. If you could not increase the revenue, you would be basically forced to lay people off. We cannot continue to measure success solely onthe bottom line at the expense of the people in the middle.

You see, the people in the middle are where the work actually happens, where employees are collaborating with one another to get the work done and to make sure the customers are satisfied. Somehow, the middle becomes so invisible by spreadsheets, deadlines and financial reviews. In doing so, many livelihoods are being deferred or destroyed.

CHANGE THE NARRATIVE

It is time to change the narrative, and it starts with leadership. Too many times, as leaders, we are so preoccupied with saving our jobs that our sole purpose is meeting that bottom line. Sometimes we have to push back on the targets that are given to us and remind our bosses that the people in the middle matter too. While profit remains important, we should broaden our definition of success to include sustainability, well-being, and integrity for the employees. Somehow, this must be incorporated into the KPIs.

Leaders need to listen to those in the middle and lead with empathy. Leaders need to remember the middle, and they also remember at some point in their career, they were in the middle too. When they remember the middle, they will be conscious of the fact that behind every success is the result of quiet persistence and collective strength from the middle.

A practical thing to do is to highlight and share stories of the people behind the numbers. This will really make people feel they are valued by the company.

Another way to change the narrative is the way we describe our people. Instead of saying low-skilled jobs, say essential workers. Instead of saying non-leadership, say operational backbone.

CONCLUSION

It is very troubling that we chase the outcomes at the expense of the very people who produce them. The middle is not where we cut costs, but where we generate significant values and meanings. Furthermore, the bottom line can only be as strong as the people, processes and values that support it. I think some companies are waking up to reality and are now investing in the people and processes. More needs to be done, or otherwise we will be faced with the people in the middle who are very much burned out and dissatisfied and then your bottom line is severely impacted.

Shooting for the treetops

KENYATTA E. LEWIS

Kenyatta Lewis is the pastor of Harvest Bible Chapel, a growing church committed to taking followers of Jesus deeper and going further in their faith. Besides loving, serving, and helping people he has watched the extended Director's cut of the Lord of the Rings trilogy multiple times.

"Dream big". "Follow your passion". "You can make a difference". "You can be anything you want". Around this time of the year, when schools graduate their charges, graduation speeches are littered with the above comments. The idea, I think, is to encourage, inspire, and motivate young, fresh minds to pursue their dreams and make the world a better place. To be fair, they also express gratitude for and acknowledgement of the support and hard work done by the students. But, I think, we would do better encouraging others, and ourselves, to shoot for the treetops, and not the stars.

In the world of football/soccer, it has become common to refer to certain clubs as feeder clubs. Often, these are small, well-run football clubs that spot potential in players, work with them, and ultimately develop these talents into world-class players. However, once the bigger, better-funded clubs, whose sole desire is to win at all costs, see these players, they buy them for large sums of money, which in turn helps the feeder clubs to repeat the cycle. The supporters of these so-called feeder clubs gripe every year or so as their best player leaves them for a bigger club, often declaring that it was his dream to always play for the big, rich club. What the average fan does not know, but the owners, executives, and especially the finance team, along with some realistic fans, is that this is how they, the smaller club, has to function to survive in a market that does not allow them to become a big, rich club (unless a beyond rich person wants a new thing to own). In other words, the people who make the decisions possess a big dose of realism, and they act accordingly. They won't ever tell the average fan that, but they have to be realistic. Like most smart politicians, they are very, very clear on what they can and can't do; they may promise more than they can accomplish, but they know, and the smart voters know, and everyone but the unrealistic knows what the game is. I think it's time that we in the Caribbean accept reality.

We do not and will not have the necessary capital investment, population size, history, culture, metanarrative, physical infrastructure, human skill base, institutions, access to networks, energy reserves, and the political or popular will to be "first world" (whatever that means to you). We do have the capacity to be a feeder region. Meaning through culture, training, and position, we can supply the "first world" (hate the term) with skilled, hard-working, grateful, and dynamic men and women, poets and scientists, theologians and writers, thinkers and musicians, all as part of the God-given, human drive to make the world a place that aligns with our dreams and imagination. Once we accept this reality, we should take steps to invest in education, the arts, sports, and hospitality. All the while ensuring that we have the best and most supportive governance structure and practices in place to ensure we survive and thrive in what best suits us. I know this is not a popular thought, but sometimes, it's best to shoot for the treetops and not the stars.

POST-BLOWBACK

Every once in a while, a small football club surprises the world by having a really good season. They compete against the bigger clubs, sometimes beating them. The neutrals get behind them, and they are the talk of the town. Everyone loves a rags-to-riches story, and we all cheer for Cinderella (as long as she is an exception and not the norm). So, every once in a while, as long as we lead well, execute well, and pursue the realistic and achievable goals we set for ourselves, we will do something remarkably exceptional. We will have a good run. But it won't last, but we can enjoy it while it lasts. When I argue for being realistic, I do not mean we should not dream. Have you ever wondered what those in the treetops dream about? Maybe they dream about stars.

TCI needs a national fingerprint database, now more than ever

The Turks and Caicos Islands (TCI) are at a critical juncture. Violent crime has taken root; illegal immigration is testing our borders, and the population is growing faster than ever. In this new reality, we require new tools—and one of the most effective may be the creation of a national fingerprint database.

Yes, it's controversial. But it's also essential to help us stay ahead of evolving threats.

In many countries, fingerprinting is already integrated into issuing identity cards, driving licences, and even voter registration. The reason? Biometric databases help prevent identity fraud, support public safety, and enable governments to deliver services more efficiently.

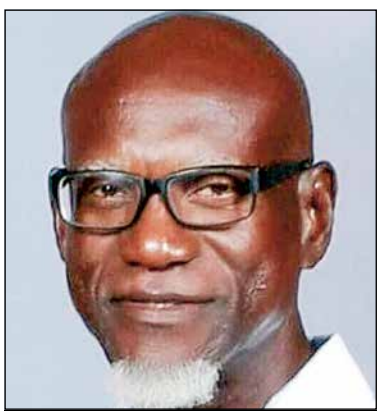

For TCI, the stakes are high. Our law enforcement officers are dedicated, but without modern tools, they face an uphill battle. A centralised fingerprint database would allow police to identify suspects more quickly, link individuals to crime scenes, and track repeat offenders—whether they use aliases or move between islands.

Investigations today are often delayed or derailed by unreliable identity information or witnesses unwilling to speak. That must change.

THE IMMIGRATION FACTOR

Illegal immigration poses another major challenge. Without reliable identity checks, it is difficult to determine who is in the country, what their background is, or whether they present a risk. A fingerprint database would offer a dependable method of verification—even when documents are missing or forged.

This is not about targeting any specific group; it's about fairness and accountability for all. We cannot govern effectively or protect our residents if we cannot confirm who they are.

BY ED FORBES
A concerned citizen of Grand Turk

PRIVACY VS PUBLIC SAFETY

Some may argue that fingerprinting citizens is a breach of privacy. But the reality is: security and privacy must be balanced. The key lies in building a system with clear legislation, restricted data access, and independent oversight—as seen in other jurisdictions.

TCI can adopt best practices, ensuring the system is robust, ethical, and not open to abuse. Doing nothing, however, invites greater risk—especially as crime becomes more organised and more violent.

WIDER BENEFITS

Fingerprinting has benefits far beyond criminal justice. It can help prevent voter fraud, stop individuals from collecting multiple benefits, and improve access to public services. In emergencies, it can assist with identifying victims or locating missing persons.

A biometric system also enhances national development. As we welcome more investors and visitors, stability and security remain crucial. A fingerprint database signals a commitment to order and modernisation.

WHAT NEEDS TO HAPPEN

To succeed, we must evolve from collecting fingerprints only at arrest or for police records. Key steps include:

- Laws authorising biometric collection for identity cards, licences, and immigration
- A secure, centralised database accessible to relevant law enforcement
- Public awareness campaigns to build trust and transparency
- International partnerships for technical and financial support

This won't happen overnight. But inaction will leave us increasingly vulnerable.

CONCLUSION

The time for hesitation has passed. TCI must act to safeguard its communities, strengthen border control, and modernise its public safety infrastructure.

A fingerprint database won't solve every issue, but it could be a powerful leap forward in making the Turks and Caicos Islands safer, stronger, and more secure.

Eight ways to leave the haters out of your Zen life

So you've been working on your inner peace. You've got a meditation app, sage burning on all corners of your bed, a lively money-plan, three crystals you can't pronounce, and you've said "Namaste" more in the past week than you've said "Hey".

But what do you do when your Zen bubble is invaded by haters, mood-killers, and energy vampires?

Here are eight ways to keep your aura glowing while giving negativity the spiritual boot—with love, of course.

1. SILENT MODE IS YOUR SPIRIT ANIMAL

If Buddha had a smartphone, do you think he'd answer Karen's 11 p.m. text about her latest drama? No. He'd be on 'Do Not Disturb' with a peppermint tea. Remember: Just because they message you doesn't mean you owe them your peace.

2. NOT EVERY BATTLE NEEDS A WARRIOR

Some people love to argue. They'll debate a brick wall if you let them. Instead of engaging, nod slowly, whisper "interesting," and float away like the calm, emotionally unavailable swan you were born to be.

3. STAGE FIVE CLINGER?

When someone's vibe feels off and they won't stop oversharing their chaos, just mentally wrap them in white light—and stage your living room the second they leave. Bonus points if you chant something mysterious like, "Be gone, Becky."

4. MASTER THE PASSIVE-AGGRESSIVE SMILE

This is the Mona Lisa of social defence mechanisms. Perfect it. Use it. Especially when someone says, "Oh, you're doing yoga now?" Smile. Say, "Yes, and I've never had more flexible boundaries."

5. UNFOLLOW, MUTE, BLOCK – SPIRITUALLY

Digital haters count too. If your feed is full of people who make your chakras clench, cleanse it. You're not rude—you're curating peace. Namaste, unfollowed.

6. PROTECT YOUR ENERGY LIKE IT'S THE LAST FRENCH FRY/ OF MAC & CHEESE

If you're like me, time is sacred. Energy is gold. And if someone's constantly draining yours, it's okay to cut the cord—lovingly. Say, "I send you light," and then... vanish into the wind like a wellness ninja.

7. CALL IN YOUR HIGHER SELF (OR YOUR PET, HONESTLY)

When you're tempted to clap back, ask yourself: What would my higher self do? (Or better yet, what would my dog do? Probably nap or lick someone and move on.)

8. REMEMBER: KARMA IS WAY MORE CREATIVE THAN YOU ARE

You don't need to get revenge. The Universe has its own HR department. Sit back, sip your herbal tea, and trust that karma handles all customer complaints—efficiently and without receipts.

So next time a hater tries to dim your light, just remember: You're too grounded to be dragged down. Light a candle, breathe deep, and if all else fails... sage your inbox.

Mobile lifelines: TCIG boosts emergency services with new ambulance fleet

BY OLIVIA ROSE

In a symbolic ribbon-cutting ceremony at the Downtown Ballpark in Providenciales, the Turks and Caicos Islands Government (TCIG) unveiled six cutting-edge ambulances, marking a pivotal moment in national healthcare infrastructure.

Director of Emergency Medical Services, Andy Brijmohansingh, called the moment "a significant milestone in ongoing efforts to strengthen emergency medical care across our nation."

He emphasised the strategic distribution, stating the vehicles would be "distributed equally and equitably throughout the islands, ensuring each community—from Providenciales to South Caicos, North, and Middle—receives high-quality pre-hospital care."

Walter Cox Jr, a young entrepreneur who began his journey at 23, partnered with the government to make this dream a reality.

Together, they designed ambulances that were more than just medical transport—they were symbols of hope and a commitment to every citizen's health.

Cox, owner of Champion Motors, shared an emotional narrative of perseverance. "Eleven years ago, we were two young professionals and Turks and Caicos Islanders who wanted to excel," Cox revealed, highlighting the government's early faith in young local entrepreneurs.

Health Minister, Hon Kyle Knowles, delivered perhaps the most passionate address, declaring, "These ambulances are more than just vehicles. These are mobile lifelines. These are symbols of belief that quality healthcare and timely emergency services should never be a luxury afforded to only some, but a right available to all."

Governor, EMTs, and government ministers celebrate the commissioning of new ambulances

HE Governor Dileeni Daniel-Selvaratnam, underscored the human element, noting the ambulances represent "a moment of pride and service" that reflects "our recognition of the value of life and that every second counts."

EMT Jamya Rigby, representing frontline workers, expressed profound gratitude: "As a young Turks Islander, I am especially proud to witness this moment—one that speaks volumes about the value our government places on the well-being of its people."

The state-of-the-art "mobile lifelines" signalled a commitment that, in the Turks and Caicos Islands, no life would be left behind.

Fifteen employees in FortisTCI's inaugural PROPEL emerging leaders' program have completed their 10-month development journey.

The program culminated in the presentation of capstone projects—comprehensive, research-driven proposals addressing key areas and opportunities for the Company. These projects covered regulatory reform, workforce development and engagement, and enhancing customer value, to help inform the Company's strategy.

During the closing ceremony, FortisTCI Vice President of Corporate Services, Finance, and CFO Aisha Laporte gave remarks, President and CEO Ruth Forbes delivered an inspiring charge to the graduates, and Leadership expert and program facilitator, Richard Solomon, delivered the keynote address, urging participants to boldly rock the boat, challenging norms and driving meaningful change rather than settling for the status quo.

We would like to extend heartfelt gratitude to Vice President Aisha Laporte and Claudia Munnings, Director of Learning and Organizational Development, for their remarkable efforts in launching this tailored leadership development program. The impact has been nothing short of transformative, and participants are now armed with a dynamic set of skills to propel them forward.

Govt moves to bridge digital skills gap, cultivate home-grown financial talent

BY OLIVIA ROSE

The Turks and Caicos Islands Government (TCIG) is taking decisive steps to build a sustainable talent pipeline, aiming to develop a skilled local workforce to support the growing financial services sector—particularly in areas such as FinTech, RegTech, and Artificial Intelligence (AI).

This strategy, outlined by the Minister of Information Technology and Energy, Hon E. Jay Saunders, signals a shift from a reactive posture to proactive leadership in technological innovation.

Minister Saunders articulated his vision for transformational change within his ministry and across the wider economy at the recently held Financial Services Commission Annual Industry Conference.

"I believe transformational change involves becoming pro-growth. Too often in the Turks and Caicos Islands, we take a back seat and wait to see initiatives unfold elsewhere before responding. But transformational change means stepping up and leading—particularly in FinTech, RegTech, and now AI. These areas present us with a real opportunity to leapfrog even those jurisdictions already invested in such technology."

Minister of Information Technology and Energy, Hon E.J. Saunders

One tangible example of this commitment is the recent partnership with the World Bank, through which the ministry secured access to digital skills courses.

"Earlier this year, I attended meetings with the World Bank to discuss the national ID project, and one of the programmes they offered was the Vincula Latin America initiative to improve digital skills. It's powered by Coursera and originally provided 5,000 course licences to Latin American entities. Countries, chambers of commerce, or ministries could apply for up to 500 licences, and we did. In conjunction with the Ministry of Education, we were awarded the maximum, 500 courses for the Turks and Caicos Islands."

The Minister highlighted both the financial value and strategic importance of the programme. "These courses focus heavily on digital literacy, and for reference, they represent about US$40,000 in value. It's not a massive cost, but it's a smart investment. My idea is that the government should match that value in its own spending to enable continued learning. We must ensure Turks and Caicos Islanders benefit from these resources and strengthen their skills in digital literacy, particularly as FinTech and RegTech become essential to our economic future."

Vincula LAC is a World Bank initiative in collaboration with Coursera, designed to promote digital human capital development across Latin America and the Caribbean. It provides free access to training and certification in key areas of the digital economy.

According to the World Bank, the programme's objective is to develop digital and soft skills that are critical to the current and future labour market. Through 5,000 free accesses to the Coursera platform, participants can earn certifications from leading global universities and companies.

This strategic investment in digital literacy and continuous education is intended to equip the local population with the tools required to seize high-value job creation opportunities and foster a sustainable and home-grown talent base within the financial services sector.

APPOINTMENT

New Director of Culture is former cop Odessa Forbes

Odessa Forbes has been appointed as the Director of Culture within the Ministry of Education, Youth, Sports and Culture, bringing over 20 years of diverse leadership experience to her new role.

Forbes holds a master's in business administration and a bachelor's degree in criminal justice from the American Intercontinental University, Florida; a certificate in Business from the Turks and Caicos Islands Community College and a certificate in Project Management through the University of the West Indies.

She recently served as Training Manager for the Royal Turks and Caicos Islands Police Force, where she led organisation-wide professional development and compliance training for over 400 officers and recruits, a congratulatory note from the Deputy Governor's Office read this week.

Her extensive experience includes culture development through the leading initiatives that promote local heritage and community engagement, ensuring that cultural values are integrated into organisational practices and community programs within the Royal Turks and Caicos Islands Police Force.

Before assuming the Training Manager position, Forbes served in the Royal Turks and Caicos Islands Police Force for over a decade, rising through the ranks to become a Police Sergeant. Earlier in her career, she also gained valuable experience in the hospitality sector, working as a restaurant manager, where she developed strong operational, people management and customer engagement skills.

Speaking on her new role, Forbes said, "I am deeply honoured and excited to serve as the Director of Culture. This role offers a powerful opportunity to preserve, celebrate and share the rich cultural identity of the Turks and Caicos Islands, both at home and with the world. As our society continues to grow and diversify, it is more important than ever that our national values, traditions and stories remain visible, accessible and deeply rooted in our collective identity. I look forward to working with communities across the islands to ensure our culture continues to inspire pride, unity and innovation for future generations. I remain grateful for the encouragement of my family and mentors and I embrace this role with humility, vision and purpose."

Deputy Governor and Head of the Public Service HE, Anya Williams, said, "It gives me great pleasure to congratulate Mrs. Odessa Forbes on her appointment as our new Director of Culture.

"The promotion and preservation of culture is extremely important to our islands, as it not only honours our rich heritage but also shapes the identity and values of our future generations.

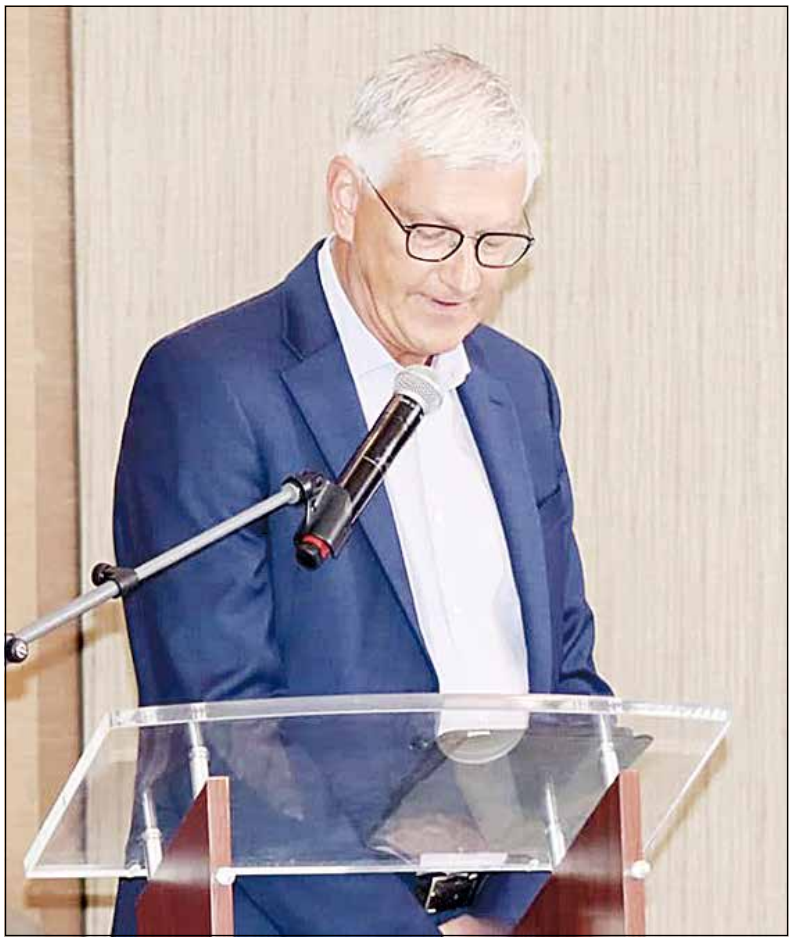

Odessa Forbes

"We wish Mrs. Forbes well on her appointment as she works to chart a new path in advancing cultural development, fostering creative expression and in ensuring that the diverse traditions of our people continue to thrive and inspire. Congratulations on your new appointment, Mrs. Forbes!"

New regulatory sandbox to fuel growth in islands' financial sector

BY OLIVIA ROSE

FSC Chair Geoffrey Scott during a panel discussion at the FSC's Annual Industry Conference

HE Governor Dileeni Daniel-Selvaratnam during a panel discussion at the conference

The Turks and Caicos Islands are poised to ignite a new era of financial innovation with the formal announcement of a regulatory sandbox, a strategic move designed to attract cutting-edge business models and leverage the islands' established expertise, particularly in the captive insurance sector.

This forward-thinking initiative, spearheaded by the Financial Services Commission (FSC), signals a collaborative approach between regulators, government, and industry to cultivate a dynamic and responsive financial landscape.

A regulatory sandbox is a controlled testing environment that allows financial innovators to trial new products or services under lighter oversight before full licensing is required.

FSC Chair Geoffrey Scott, who formally announced the sandbox, emphasised its transformative potential, particularly in fostering earlier engagement with novel financial concepts.

"I'm happy to actually announce formally here today that the FSC is now working with the government, and we will be working through partners in the industry as well to create a proper regulatory sandbox here in Turks and Caicos Islands," Scott declared.

He elaborated on the crucial difference this approach will make: "I think it's going to be a big step forward in how our key stakeholders …are able to work together on new ideas.

"Why is that different for us? Because that's going to allow the FSC to start to engage earlier, and sometimes without full information about business models. So that's a shift for the FSC and I think, but it is critical that we'll be supporting the private sector and government to attract new entrants into our islands with ideas that quite literally have a sandbox framework where we all get a new sandbox together and play around with some ideas, share ideas about risk, share ideas about regulations, and then come to a mutual agreement.

The idea is to get in early and I think that's one change in the FSC. I'm hopeful in the next couple of years that our engagement is much earlier, and that's agility."

The regulatory sandbox is not merely a theoretical concept but a practical framework allowing businesses to test innovative products, services, or delivery channels in a controlled environment, under close regulatory supervision.

This allows for real-world testing without immediately incurring the full regulatory burden, providing valuable insights for both the innovator and the regulator.

For the Turks and Caicos, it means a streamlined path for new financial technologies and services to find a home, Scott underscored.

Crucially, this initiative also aims to revitalize and diversify the territory's long-standing expertise in captive insurance.

Scott also touched upon the evolution of the captive insurance sector, acknowledging a decline in Producer Affiliated Reinsurance Companies ("PARCs), and captive insurance companies, while highlighting a strategic opportunity. "PARCs have been the mainstay of our captive insurance base here in Turks and Caicos for many years. It's true that the number of current PARCs or new PARCs being formed, and registered is declining.

But I don't think that's a sign of a global trend. I think what that is, is a sign that we're competing with other jurisdictions," he remarked.

He then pivoted to a forward-looking perspective: "I think the bigger opportunity may be to look at PARCs not just as PARCs but as captives, and realize that we actually have a certain expertise, not just at the FSC, by the way, in the islands as well, but we have a certain expertise in captive insurance already.

"We can use that more broadly, to attract new forms of business like climate risk and cyber risk captives", he added.

HE Governor Dileeni Daniel Selvaratnam also underscored the importance of this agile approach, particularly in understanding new and complex financial products. "I think the key thing we need to embrace is the key to success and, actually, the key to survival, but also we need to get comfortable in risk. There is opportunity in risk".

FINANCIAL INNOVATION

A key aspect of this transformation involves not only managing existing entities but also preparing for future entrants. "It's been mentioned about building capacity.

"We're going to need to do more to build capacity in the right areas to manage not just our current regulated entities, but also potential new entrants," he explained.

The FSC is also keen on leveraging data more effectively to streamline its oversight. "As we use technology, I think it's really about the FSC collecting a lot of data from our existing entities that we already supervise and regulate."

"The collection of that, of that data, the use of that data, is going to become more and more important so that we're not duplicating, we're not overlapping, and we're also not missing anything."

The combination of a proactive regulatory sandbox and the strategic leveraging of existing captive insurance expertise positions the Turks and Caicos Islands to attract not only new FinTech ventures but also to become a leading jurisdiction for specialized insurance solutions addressing global challenges like climate change and cybersecurity.

This approach signifies a determined effort to evolve the financial services sector into a more dynamic and diversified economic engine.

Decomposed body found by searchers for missing American tourist

– police autopsy results are being awaited

Authorities have not yet confirmed whether the body of a man discovered on the roadside in Grace Bay on Saturday, July 5, is that of Brian Tarrence, the missing American tourist. Tarrence was reported missing from his hotel on June 25.

While family members, friends, and concerned members of the community await updates from the police, the family has engaged a private investigator to examine the circumstances related to the New York man's disappearance.

The 51-year-old Georgia resident was reported missing by his family while vacationing in the Turks and Caicos Islands in late June. Tarrence was last observed between 2 am and 5 am on Wednesday, June 25. He was traveling with his wife, and at the time of his disappearance, he was seen leaving their hotel on foot.

Hotel surveillance footage released by American news outlets this week showed Tarrance walking away from the hotel. The couple had been staying at the Paradise Inn on Grace Bay in Providenciales.

According to WABC in New York, the family of Brian Tarrence hired a private investigator to help with the search. Carl DeFazio – reportedly former NYPD - lives in Providenciales and is working closely with the Royal Turks and Caicos Islands Police Force.

Last weekend, at about 6:30 am Saturday, search teams found a decomposed body of a man in a roughly 5-foot-deep ditch on the side of the road.

DeFazio reportedly told WABC that additional security footage that has not yet been released shows Tarrence in that same area. DeFazio said the day before Tarrence disappeared, the couple went on a boat trip, and that his wife said her husband seemed off.

"The day that he did disappear, he was having some, I would say mental issues, he was not under doctors' care, he was not under any kind of medication that I'm aware of that was shared with me, but he was acting incoherent, he wasn't acting the same as he was and the wife was quite concerned with that," DeFazio said to WABC.

Tarrence is a vice president at Diligent Software.

As reported by WABC, a company spokesperson issued a statement, saying in part, "We have made ourselves available to fully cooperate with local law enforcement and have engaged a security firm to support the ongoing search efforts."

DeFazio said many people have reached out to him who want to help with the search. He reportedly said at this point there is no indication a crime has been committed.

The Royal Turks and Caicos Police Force has, however, made no such pronouncements.

At the time of his disappearance, Brian's brother, Mike Tarrance shared that his brother had a drinking problem and may have been inebriated at the time of his disappearance.

The Royal Turks and Caicos Police Force continues to call on residents to keep an eye out for the missing man and report any information they may have about his whereabouts to 911, or Crime Stoppers at 1-800-8477 or the nearest police station. (DELANA ISLES)

One less storm this hurricane season, says Colorado State researchers

The number of storms expected for the 2025 hurricane season has been slightly reduced, researchers at Colorado State University revealed this week.

On Wednesday, July 9, they offered an updated outlook for this year's Atlantic hurricane season. Their forecast now calls for 16 named storms, a decrease of one storm from the university's June forecast. They predict that eight of those storms will be hurricanes and three will be major hurricanes.

An average hurricane season has 14 named storms, seven of which are hurricanes and three are major hurricanes. CSU researchers are still forecasting a "slightly above normal" hurricane season this year, as first reported by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) in May.

The Atlantic hurricane season officially began on June 1, 2025, and will end on November 30, 2025. Forecasters within NOAA's National Weather Service first predicted above-normal hurricane activity in the Atlantic basin this year.

The alphabetical list of 2025 Atlantic hurricane names as chosen by the World Meteorological Organization

NOAA's outlook back in May predicts a 30% chance of a near-normal season, a 60% chance of an above-normal season, and a 10% chance of a below-normal season. The agency forecasted a range of 13 to 19 total named storms (winds of 39 mph or higher). Of those, 6 -10 are forecast to become hurricanes (winds of 74 mph or higher), including 3-5 major hurricanes (category 3, 4 or 5; with winds of 111 mph or higher). NOAA has a 70% confidence in these ranges.

This week CSU researchers reported that the primary reason for the slight decrease in their estimation is because of stronger levels of wind shear expected in the Caribbean. The report said wind shear, which is a change in wind speed or direction, can throw a hurricane off balance, thereby weakening it or tearing it apart.

"High levels of Caribbean shear in June and July are typically associated with less active hurricane seasons," the report noted. It further highlights that sea surface temperatures across the eastern and central Atlantic are slightly warmer than normal, but not as warm as in early July 2024. Warmer waters help storms form and fuel their intensification.

This year's forecast is milder than 2024's, when CSU researchers predicted an "extremely active" season with 11 hurricanes.

Last year saw 18 named storms, five were major hurricanes.

Despite the reduction of storms in this year's forecast, CSU researchers warned residents to be prepared. Major hurricanes usually form between mid-August and early October.

"As with all hurricane seasons, coastal residents are reminded that it only takes one hurricane making landfall to make it an active season. Thorough preparations should be made every season, regardless of predicted activity," the report urged. (DELANA ISLES)

Special Education Needs Services hosts weeklong speech camps for children

The Hampton University's Speech-Language Pathology (SLP) programme recently visited the Turks and Caicos Islands as part of their partnership with Therapy Abroad.

The visit continued the efforts to enhance speech and language development among children with neurodevelopmental challenges in the TCI.

This week, the Department of Special Education Needs Services (SENS) hosted two speech camps at Ianthe Pratt Primary School and Shining Stars Preparatory. They provided individualised assessments and group speech therapy sessions for 20 children with speech and language delays.

The department said the schools were chosen based on the high number of incoming speech and communication referrals to the department. They said the initiative represents a growing collaboration between SENS and international universities through Therapy Abroad to bring specialist services directly to children across the islands who may otherwise face long wait times or limited access to therapy.

The visiting team included speech-language pathology graduate students and faculty members. They worked closely with the Department's clinicians to assess, support, and empower children through evidence-based communication strategies. Activities focused on language enrichment, articulation, social communication skills, and caregiver education. The team also donated a communication board to the SNAP Centre playground as a resource for the non-verbal learners.

Dr Anya Malcolm-Gibbs, Director of Special Education Needs Services said the partnership has made an incredible difference in the lives of the children and families they serve. "Every time we bring in these volunteer teams, we're not just expanding access, we're building confidence and capacity within our system. We thank Hampton University and Therapy Abroad for their commitment and generosity."

Lashaunda Skippings, Coordinator of Assessments and Minister of Education, and Hon Rachel Taylor both praised the initiative.

Skippings: "These camps allow us to fast-track progress for some of our most vulnerable learners and support parents in understanding their child's development."

The minister noted that partnerships such as this foster inclusive education, ensuring no child is left behind.

The programme is part of a broader national effort to strengthen support services for children with special needs across the TCI. The Department continues to encourage parents and caregivers to continue registering their children for services as more therapy teams are expected to visit throughout the year

FortisTCI achieves prestigious platinum status from Investors in People

FortisTCI has attained Platinum accreditation from Investors in People (IIP)—the highest level of recognition offered by the globally respected people management standard. This distinction places FortisTCI among the elite 7% of IIP-accredited organisations worldwide.

IIP accreditation lasts for three years, with four levels of certification—Standard, Silver, Gold, and Platinum—based on performance. The IIP framework assesses how effectively an organisation leads, supports, and improves its workforce. It evaluates performance across nine indicators and 27 thematic areas, each measured at four levels of maturity: Developing, Established, Advanced, and High Performing.

FortisTCI made an extraordinary leap from Silver to Platinum since its last assessment three years ago, having achieved "high-performing" ratings across all 27 themes.

These themes examine how organisations lead and inspire, live their values, empower teams, manage performance, recognise excellence, structure work, build capacity, foster continuous improvement, and create sustainable success. Although FortisTCI submitted a supporting evidence portfolio as part of the review, results were largely shaped by employee feedback gathered through an anonymous online survey and one-on-one interviews conducted by IIP assessors. A record-breaking 93% of employees participated in the May assessment.

FortisTCI President and CEO Ruth Forbes and members of the executive team

Survey findings revealed that 93% of staff affirmed the Company's clear and shared values, while nearly 90% recognised its strong learning and development programmes and their impact on organisational success. FortisTCI's overall performance score of 768 significantly exceeded both the sector and IIP global averages, ranking the Company third in its sector worldwide—60 points higher than the sector average and 39 points above the global IIP average.

FortisTCI is now one of the top-performing Platinum-accredited organisations outside the United Kingdom and has been invited to enter the Investors in People Global Awards 2025 for Overseas Employer of the Year—a chance to be crowned the world's leading Platinum employer in its category.

It remains the only IIP-certified organisation in the Turks and Caicos Islands, the sole utility company in the Caribbean region with Platinum status, and one of only two companies in the wider region to hold this mark of excellence. Of the 50,000 organisations accredited by IIP worldwide, just 7% have achieved the Platinum standard. FortisTCI was first certified at Standard level in 2016 and progressed to Silver in 2018 and 2022.

Paul Devoy, CEO of Investors in People, commented: "We'd like to congratulate FortisTCI. Platinum accreditation on We Invest in People is a remarkable effort for any organisation, and places FortisTCI in fine company with organisations that understand the value of people."

FortisTCI President and CEO Ruth Forbes stated: "As a company, we benchmark ourselves against the best globally, and we're always looking for ways to make work better. This Platinum accreditation reflects our ongoing commitment to sustaining a high-performance, people-centred culture. The Investors in People results tell a powerful story about how our people practices, policies, and programmes continue to evolve. Several initiatives were implemented in line with a comprehensive HR strategic plan, and we extend heartfelt gratitude to the Human Resources department for championing our mission to transform the employee experience and create a more engaged workplace."

She added: "A special thank you to the entire FortisTCI team for sharing their views on how we lead, support, and improve them. We will continue to invest in our people—not only to strengthen their fulfilment, engagement, and productivity at work, but also to enhance how we serve our customers, support our communities, and add value to our stakeholders."

Caribbean leaders pledge to join forces against crime and support for Haiti

Leaders in the Caribbean have pledged to join forces to tackle crime and violence as they reaffirmed their support for Haiti, which the UN says continues to be 'paralysed' by gangs.

Taking the reins as chair of the Caribbean Community (Caricom), a bloc of 15 countries, Andrew Holness, Jamaica's prime minister, said security in the region would be a "matter of great priority" under his chairmanship.

The prime minister raised concerns about the current pace of the international momentum to support Haiti, as he addressed the opening of this week's Caricom leaders' summit. He committed to prioritising support for the Caribbean nation, which is a member of Caricom.

Speaking to the Guardian at the conference, the prime minister of Antigua and Barbuda, Gaston Browne, said the challenge of crime and security "is one of the most significant existential threats facing the region".

"It requires a collaborative approach among Caricom countries and we recognise that the criminals are getting far more sophisticated and when you look at the issue of transnational criminal activities it is important for us to conjoin our efforts," he said.

Echoing his sentiments, Terrance Drew, the St Kitts and Nevis' prime minister, said he welcomed a regional approach to the issue. "The region is dealing with the issue of security on multiple levels,

Crime continues unabated in Haiti

Haiti being the area that is most affected. I think this would require, of course, the coordination of all of the member states of the Caricom … so I welcome the reiteration of us working together as a region," he said.

Even as the conference was opening in Montego Bay, Jamaica, on Sunday, Haiti's once-iconic Hotel Oloffson, a beloved Gothic gingerbread building in Port-au-Prince that inspired books, hosted parties and attracted visitors from Mick Jagger to Haitian presidents, was burned down by gangs.

According to the UN, since January, more than 4,000 people have been killed in Haiti, a 24% increase compared with the same period last year.

Speaking at a press conference at the meeting, member of Haiti's Transitional Presidential Council, Laurent Saint-Cyr, joined the calls for stronger regional assistance to curb the illicit arms trade and drug trafficking, which play a part in fueling Haiti's crisis.

"Haiti, today, needs the region to speak with one voice in defense of security, peace and sustainable development," he said, adding, "we are also counting on you to intensify advocacy with other regional and global partners for increased support towards more rigorous regional cooperation."

Holness, who has proposed a regional justice and security framework, called for a strong and coordinated response to the escalating violence in the region, which he said had evolved far beyond traditional street-level crime, posing a threat to the region's security.

"We must dismantle the influence of gangs in our communities, disrupt their finances … I am on record as saying that we need to launch a war on gangs of a similar magnitude and nature to the 'war on terror'," he said.

In the past, Caribbean leaders have jointly raised concerns about the alarming "epidemic of crime and violence in the Caribbean, fuelled by illegal guns and organised criminal gangs". In 2024, Haiti, Trinidad and Tobago and Jamaica topped Statista's homicide rates ranking for Latin America and the Caribbean.

Affirming her commitment to unity on regional justice and security, outgoing chair of Caricom, Mia Mottley, the prime minister of Barbados, in her speech at the conference pointed to the issue of gun trafficking from the US to the Caribbean: "Regrettably I've said over and over we pay a high price for the second amendment rights of the United States of America's citizens," she said.

In 2024, the New York attorney general, Letitia James, announced new measures and legislation to tackle gun trafficking from the US to the Caribbean. James quoted Jamaican government estimates that at least 200 guns are trafficked into the country from the US every month, and said that the weapons are fuelling violent crime and enabling networks that traffic drugs to the US.

But Jamaica has since seen a significant decline in murders. The country has accomplished a more than 40% reduction in murders in the first five months of the year, compared with the same period last year, the result, officials say, of a "sustained and strategic" multibillion-dollar investment in national security.

At the Caricom meeting, Holness showed Caribbean leaders some of the country's crime-fighting tech and strategies, which officials said "demonstrate how Jamaica has integrated advanced technology into law enforcement operations, improving incident response, investigative processes and strategic deployment".

In her opening speech at the conference, Mottley stressed the importance of regional approach to crime and security as she appealed for more countries to choose the Caribbean Court of Justice (CCJ), whose new president, the Jamaican jurist Winston Anderson, was sworn in during the conference, as their final court of appeal.

The CCJ is now the final court of appeal for Barbados, Belize, Guyana, Dominica and St Lucia, but for some other Caribbean countries, which were former colonies, the London-based privy council is the final court of appeal.

Mottley urged Caribbean citizens to support the CCJ. "We are aware that there are some countries that have the requirement of referendum," she said, pointing to the need for public education on the subject. (The Guardian)

So-called "dirty money" in BVI comes from the UK

As UK advocates continue to portray the British Virgin Islands as a jurisdiction that conceals "dirty money," talk show host Claude Skelton Cline has pushed back, noting that many British citizens also conduct business with the territory.

Two UK Members of Parliament as well as advocacy groups have recently called on the British Parliament to impose an Order in Council over the BVI, following the territory's failure to meet the final deadline to implement publicly accessible registers within its financial services industry.

Some media outlets and critics have labelled the BVI a tax haven that facilitates the hiding of "dirty money"—a term often used in reference to money laundering and terrorist financing.

However, Skelton Cline rejected such negative characterizations of the BVI's financial services sector.

"They've used the very provocative term 'dirty money'. What makes the money in BVI dirty when all the wealthy people of the earth, including your [UK] citizens, are using Virgin Islands companies?" Skelton Cline said on his Honestly Speaking radio show. "What makes it dirty here and what makes it exclusive to us? This isn't the global standard."

He added: "Bermuda, Anguilla and others are included here. But we as a people take any narrative they are purporting."

Skelton Cline argued that the BVI has one of the top financial services industries globally and urged residents to reject the negative narratives being pushed by the UK.

"Everything they tell us about ourselves, we just take it and run with it. How did we come to this?" he questioned.

Amid growing pressure from UK parliamentarians and advocacy groups, it remains unclear whether the BVI government will revise its new policy, which stops short of fully implementing publicly accessible registers, in response to the latest threats of direct intervention from the UK. (BVINews)

Sand covers blood in a neighbour's yard in Montel Heights where Quincy Evans died after being attacked with cutlass and gun by his girlfriend's ex-boyfriend who also injured the woman and her daughter before ending his own life on July 8, 2025

Bahamas: Two dead, two hurt in bloodbath

A mother and her 12-year-old daughter were shot and injured, and her boyfriend killed, after the woman's ex stormed into their Montel Heights home early Tuesday morning with a gun and a cutlass, unleashing deadly violence.

The mother, Patricia Major, 41, and her daughter remain hospitalised in stable condition.

The scene was covered in blood in the wake of the violent attack.

Relatives say this wasn't a random outburst but a tragedy years in the making.

Ms Major reportedly filed complaints against her ex-boyfriend of 21 years, Jeffrey Mackey, and recently attempted to have him bound over to keep the peace. Still, around 1am, Mackey, 59, broke into her home and launched the attack.

According to Ms Major's sister-in-law, the mother's current boyfriend, Quincy Evans Sr, walked in and was immediately shot dead. Mackey then turned on Ms Major, attacking her with a cutlass before shooting her and her 12-year-old daughter.

By the time police arrived, Mackey was dead in a neighbour's yard from an apparent self-inflicted gunshot wound. A firearm was recovered nearby.

"She told him to leave her alone," said the sister in law. "She thought he had listened."

Just days before the attack, Ms Major reportedly tried to take legal action to keep Mackey away.

Their daughter, 18-year-old Tresia, told The Tribune her father had been unravelling for some time, writing disturbing notes and issuing threats.

"I know he wanted to kill her," she said yesterday. "The police know that, so instead of the police lock him up, I don't know why the police left him alone. This isn't the first time."

Cayman has a score of 82.9% in the quality of life survey among all residents

Expats enjoy Cayman life more than locals

The second biannual Cayman Islands Quality of Life survey found that expatriates appear to be enjoying their life here more than Caymanians, though the overall score was 0.7% less than the first results assessed in the spring of 2024. The comprehensive survey, which looks at many aspects of life and happiness, not just wealth, found Cayman has a score of 82.9% among all residents, but is more than a point lower for Caymanians at 81.8%.

While all residents appear most content with their economic and physical safety, which scored 85.7%, the total score was brought down by the natural and living environment, which scored 75.4% for everyone and 74.1% for local people.

While this is higher than the spring survey result, it is also directly related to the addition of significant new indicators that have allowed a more realistic measure of this category. These include environmental preservation, natural disasters and emergencies, household disaster preparedness and economic and social development.

Caymanian respondents' answers revealed strong dissatisfaction with most economic and social development indicators, as well as some environmental preservation indicators. Almost one-third of Caymanian respondents were dissatisfied with the green spaces and walkability in our communities. Over a quarter of local people also recorded being unhappy about waste management practices and recycling, as well as the state of protections for both land and marine resources.

This reflects how much more important the environment is to our quality of life than politicians have been inclined to give it credit for, as they often focus on the dollar-and-cents aspect of living. However, these results demonstrate that the public remains less than satisfied with the continued overdevelopment of the islands and the depletion of natural resources, which are eroding the country's relatively high quality of life score.

One of the most significant yardsticks for quality of life also relates to health and wellness. Residents ranked their health as the most essential quality of life at 34.5%. Across the population as a whole, the score came out at 84.8%, the second highest, but for Caymanians, it was lower at under 83%.

But the figure disguises the clear frustrations with waiting times for services from public hospitals and clinics, which scored under 71%, with 27% of Caymanians dissatisfied with these services. The score was boosted, however, by a very high spiritual rating of over 92%.

Despite the relatively high score of 84.7% for the material living conditions for most people, an estimated 11.6% of households are overcrowded. A higher number of families have bills in arrears and have been disconnected from utilities. Overall, the quality of life rating has dropped by 3.9% since the spring.

The score for leisure and social activities was 80.7%, based on work-life balance (76.4%) and social cohesion and connections (85.0%), which measures the interconnectedness of different social groups, including the prevalence of loneliness.

Holness calls for bold, united action to dismantle gangs

Jamaican Prime Minister Dr Andrew Holness has declared that dismantling criminal gangs across the Caribbean must be treated with the urgency of the global war on terror.

Holness warned that organised violence now poses a public health threat regionwide.

Delivering a commanding address as incoming chair of CARICOM at the 49th Conference of Heads of Government at the Montego Bay Convention Centre on Sunday, Holness called for transformative action on a range of critical issues, from climate justice and security to youth empowerment and regional integration, urging his colleagues to "cross the rivers" of shared challenges together.

Caricom Chair Andrew Holness, right, and Secretary General Dr Carla Barnett

"There can be no sustained prosperity without security," Holness asserted, referencing a 2024 UNODC report that spotlighted escalating gang activity in Jamaica, St Lucia, Guyana, and Trinidad and Tobago. "We need to launch a war on gangs of a similar magnitude and nature to the war on terror."

He emphasised that while the roots of gang violence may lie in poverty, broken homes, and social alienation, the modern manifestation is far more sinister, driven by transnational profit, organized intelligence, and firearm access.

"This is no longer about street-level dispossession," he warned. "It is the organisation of violence for profit, and our policy and jurisprudence must evolve to address it."

Holness underscored that this crisis should be treated as both a national security threat and a public health emergency, noting that in Jamaica, 90 per cent of those involved in homicides, both perpetrators and victims are male.

On Haiti, the prime minister reaffirmed Jamaica's unwavering commitment to supporting the embattled nation, insisting that CARICOM must "redouble its efforts" to rally international support for the deployment of a multinational force and long-term development.

"We cannot be true to our CARICOM principles if we leave our brothers and sisters in Haiti at the mercy of gangs," Holness declared. "The appetite to support Haiti has slowed. We must reignite it."

He pledged that, as CARICOM chair, the regional security strategy and support for Haiti would remain a top priority.

UK and France agree on need for new migration boat crossing 'deterrent'

British Prime Minister Keir Starmer and French President Emmanuel Macron have agreed on the need for a "new deterrent" to stop refugee and migrant crossings across the English Channel.

"The leaders agreed tackling the threat of irregular migration and small boat crossings is a shared priority that requires shared solutions," a British readout of Wednesday's meeting at 10 Downing Street said. "The two leaders agreed on the need to go further and make progress on new and innovative solutions, including a new deterrent to break the business model of these gangs."

Macron is on a three-day state visit to the United Kingdom which has moved from the genteel royal pomp and ceremony to the harder edges of the political realm as his hosts press for new measures to curb undocumented immigration.

The number of refugees and migrants arriving on England's southern coast via small boats from northern France is a major political issue for the Labour government, which has seen the far-right Reform UK party make significant political gains with a hardline anti-immigration platform.

The talks come on Macron's second day of his visit to the UK, which began with a warm welcome from King Charles III and members of the royal family and a lavish banquet at Windsor Castle.

It's the first state visit by a French president to the UK since Nicolas Sarkozy in 2008 and the first by a European Union head of state since Brexit was made official in 2020. Macron's trip came at the invitation of King Charles III.

'ONE IN-ONE OUT' DEAL NOT FAVOURED BY EU

Macron addressed the British parliament on Tuesday, promising to deliver on measures to cut the number of people crossing the English Channel, describing the issue as a "burden" to both countries. He also said that France and the UK had a "shared responsibility to address irregular migration with humanity, solidarity and fairness".

Britain hopes to strike a "one in, one out" deal to send small boat refugees and migrants back to the continent, in exchange for the UK accepting asylum seekers in Europe who have a British link, the domestic Press Association news agency reported.

France has previously refused to sign such an agreement, saying the UK should negotiate an arrangement with all European Union countries.

"This deal is far from being finished because there is a lot of opposition from certain European nations, which are usually the port of entry for people seeking to come to Europe, places like Spain, Malta, Italy, Greece and Cyprus," said Al Jazeera's Milena Veselinovic, reporting from London.

"That is because under EU law, in theory, France could just move on the people they receive from Britain and onto those countries, the first port of entry countries, to claim asylum there. So Keir Starmer doesn't only need to convince President Macron of this deal, but he also has quite significant stumbling blocks when it comes to convincing other European nations."

In parliament Nigel Farage, leader of Reform UK, challenged Starmer to "say to the French president we will not accept undocumented males across the English Channel".

There has been increasing frustration in the UK over funding for France to prevent refugees and migrants setting off and a law that prevents police intercepting boats while in the water close to shore.

"We will only provide funding that delivers for our priorities," Starmer told parliament, adding that Britain had persuaded the French "to review their laws and tactics on the north coast to take more effective action".

After he took power a year ago, Starmer promised to "smash the gangs", getting thousands of people onto the small boats – only to see numbers rise to record levels.

More than 21,000 people have crossed from northern France to southeast England in basic vessels this year, on a perilous journey.

The Macrons began the second day of their visit by paying their respects at the tomb of the late Queen Elizabeth II at Windsor's St George's Chapel.

Macron then discussed biodiversity issues with the king during a stroll in the castle grounds before he bade farewell to his host and headed to central London. (AlJazeera)

Holidays to Spain, Cyprus and Turkey soar in price

All-inclusive family package holidays from the UK have jumped in price for some of the most popular destinations, including Spain, Cyprus and Turkey.

The average price for a week in Cyprus in August has gone up by 23%, from £950 per person to £1,166, figures compiled for the BBC by TravelSupermarket show.

Of the top 10 most-searched countries, Italy and Tunisia are the only ones to see prices drop by 11% and 4% respectively compared with 2024.

Travel agents say holidaymakers are booking shorter stays or travelling mid-week to cut costs.

The top five destinations in order of most searched are: Spain, Greece, Turkey, the United Arab Emirates (UAE) and Portugal. They have all seen price rises.

Trips to the UAE have seen the biggest jump, up 26% from £1,210 in August 2024 to £1,525 this year.

Cyprus had the next biggest rise and came in at number nine in terms of search popularity.

The figures are based on online searches, made on TravelSupermarket from 18 April to 17 June, for all-inclusive, seven-night family holidays in August 2024 and 2025.

While this snapshot of data reveals a general trend, costs will vary depending on exactly where a family goes and when they book.

Julia Lo Bue-Said, chief executive of travel agent industry group Advantage Travel Partnership, said the price rises were down to a number of factors.

"These increases simply keep pace with the broader cost of doing business and reflect the reality of higher operational costs, from increased energy bills affecting hotels, to elevated food costs impacting restaurants and rising wages across the hospitality sector," she said.

August is high tourist season in Barcelona, with crowds flocking to the city's beaches to enjoy the summer weather

But she added the group had seen evidence that some holidaymakers still had money to spend.

Some customers were upgrading to more premium all-inclusive packages and booking more expensive cabin seats on long-haul flights to locations such as Dubai, she said.

Holiday destinations are a frequent topic of conversation at the hairdressers.

At Voodou in Liverpool, Ellie Mooney talked to us as she got a last-minute trim before jetting off to Turkey.

"We've been going for the past 20 years or so. We normally book a year ahead then save up in dribs and drabs," she said.

Hope Curran, 21, was getting her highlights done and she and her partner had just got back from holiday in Rhodes in Greece.

"We did an all-inclusive trip because it was a bit more manageable, but it's not cheap," she said.

End of life care nurse Francesca Ramsden, 35, from Rossendale, has made it her mission to cut the cost of holidays, saving where she can and hunting for a bargain at every turn.

"My husband is sick of me, he'll ask 'have you found anything yet' and I'll say no, rocking in the corner after looking for 10,000 hours.

"The longest I've booked a holiday in advance is two to three months and I find that the closer you get, the cheaper it is."

She said she spent hours trying to save as much as possible on a May half-term break to Fuerteventura for her family of four which came in at £1,600. (BBC)

EU chief von der Leyen survives rare confidence vote

European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen has survived a confidence vote tabled by a far-right faction in the European Parliament.

Although the outcome was not a surprise, the fact that it came about at all was not a positive signal for von der Leyen, who began her second term as Commission chief only a year ago.

Confidence votes of this kind are rare and the last one was tabled against Jean-Claude Juncker more than a decade ago.

Two-thirds of all 720 Members of the European Parliament (MEPs) - or 480 - would have had to back the motion for it to pass.

Instead, only 175 voted in favour; 360 voted against and 18 abstained. The remaining MEPs did not vote.

Ursula von der Leyen secured a second term as Commission chief last July

The vote was initiated by Romanian far-right MEP Gheorghe Piperea, who accused von der Leyen of a lack of transparency over text messages she sent to the head of Pfizer during negotiations to secure Covid-19 vaccines.

The text of the motion said that von der Leyen's Commission could no longer be trusted to "uphold the principles of transparency, accountability, and good governance essential to a democratic Union".

During a fierce debate on Monday von der Leyen slammed her accusers as "conspiracy theorists".

Hitting back at Piperea and what she called "his world of conspiracies and alleged sinister plots", she said he and his cohort were "extremists", "anti-vaxxers" and "Putin apologists".

She also said the accusations against her over so-called Pfizergate were "simply a lie."

Piperea had the backing of figures such as Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orban, who posted on X a photo of von der Leyen alongside the caption "Time to go".

But his own European Conservatives and Reformists (ECR) group was split.

A sizeable portion of the ECR is made up by Brothers of Italy (FdI), the party of Italian Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni. FdI has been fostering a good relationship with von der Leyen and its MEPs voted against the motion.

In the end the votes in favour came primarily from the far-right groups Patriots for Europe (PfE) and the European of Sovereign Nations (ENS).

Von der Leyen survived the vote thanks to the support of her own centre-right European People's Party (EPP), the Socialist & Democrats (S&D), the liberal Renew, the Greens and left-wing groups.

However, the days in the lead-up to the vote saw several groupings caveat their support with gripes over von der Leyen's leadership.

Over the last year her centre-right EPP has increasingly teamed up with the far-right to pass amendments and resolutions on issues like migration and the environment, often irking liberals and left-wing parties.

Valérie Hayer, president of the centrist Renew Europe, echoed the sentiment, warning von der Leyen that her group's support was "not guaranteed" and urging the Commission chief to "take back control" of the EPP and end "alliances with the far right."

Ahead of the vote Iratxe García, leader of the S&D, said dismantling the Commission in the midst of geopolitical crisis would have been "irresponsible".

"Our vote doesn't mean that we are not critical of the European Commission," García said, citing "the recent shifts by von der Leyen towards far-right pledges."

Earlier this week there was a suggestion that the S&D might abstain from the vote, but were eventually persuaded to back von der Leyen after she reportedly ruled out cuts to social programmes in the upcoming budget.

As the vote against her leadership was taking place, Von der Leyen was giving a speech at the Ukraine Recovery Conference in Rome.

Shortly after the motion was turned down, however, she posted on X: "As external forces seek to destabilise and divide us, it is our duty to respond in line with our values."

"Thank you, and long live Europe," she added. (BBC)

Relatives mourn over the bodies of Manal Abd Rabbo and her sister Fatima, who were among 15 people killed in an Israeli strike while queuing at a medical clinic run by Project Hope in Deir al-Balah, Gaza Strip

Children queuing at Gaza health centre killed in Israeli strike, medics say

An Israeli strike killed 15 people, including women and children, gathered outside a health center in the central Gazan city of Deir Al Balah on Thursday, according to medical staff and officials in the enclave.

The Aqsa Martyrs Hospital in Gaza said eight of those killed in the strike were children, with the youngest two years old, and the oldest aged 14. It said three women and four men were also killed.

In footage obtained by CNN, several children were seen lying motionless and others appeared injured amid the sound of screams. Another video showed several children, bloodied and lying motionless, being transported on a cart.

The Israeli military said it was targeting a Hamas militant who took part in the group's October 7, 2023 attacks on Israel.

"The (Israel Defense Forces) is aware of reports regarding a number of injured individuals in the area. The incident is under review. The IDF regrets any harm to uninvolved individuals and operates to minimize harm as much as possible," the Israeli military said in a statement to CNN.

The director general of Gaza's health ministry said the strike hit near a medical center dispensing children's formula to women.

Brazil vows to match US tariffs after Trump threatens 50% levy

Brazilian President Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva has said he is ready to match any tariffs imposed on Brazil by the United States.

Lula was responding to Wednesday's threat by his US counterpart, Donald Trump, to impose a 50% import tax on Brazilian goods from 1 August.

In a letter, Trump cited Brazil's treatment of former President Jair Bolsonaro as a trigger for tariff-hike.

Bolsonaro is currently on trial for allegedly attempting to stage a coup against Lula after being defeated by him in the 2022 election.

Trump referred to Bolsonaro as "a highly respected leader throughout the world". "This Trial should not be taking place," he wrote, calling on Brazil to immediately end the "witch hunt" against the former president.

Trump's support for Bolsonaro does not come as a surprise as the two men have long been considered allies.

The US president had already slammed Brazil for its treatment of Bolsonaro on Monday, comparing it to the legal cases he himself had faced in US courts.

Brazilian President Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva

The 50% tariff threat was met with a robust and lengthy response by President Lula.

In a post on X, he stressed that Brazil was "a sovereign country with independent institutions and will not accept any tutelage".

The Brazilian leader also announced that "any unilateral tariff increases" would be met with reciprocal tariffs imposed on US goods.

The US is Brazil's second-largest trade partner after China, so the hike from a tariff rate of 10% to an eye-watering 50% - if it comes into force - would hit the South American nation hard.

But Lula also made a point of challenging Trump's assertion that the US had a trade deficit with Brazil, calling it "inaccurate".

One Republic's Tim Myers is running for California lieutenant governor

Tim Myers wants to make beautiful music with the state of California.

The founding member of One Republic is vying for the office of lieutenant governor of The Golden State. Myers posted a series of photos on social media that feature media coverage of his political aspirations.

"Since launch, my Lieutenant Governor campaign has been covered by The OC Register, The Hill, Sacramento Bee, Fox, and more," he wrote.

Tim Myers on June 2 in Los Angeles

"The momentum is still building. People across California are speaking up — and saying what we all know: it's time for change," he wrote in the captions. "The status quo in our politics isn't working. Let's write a new song for California — together!"

Myers was part of One Republic, known for their hit "Apologize," from 2002 to 2007. He has also founded Palladium Records and produced for artists such as Michelle Branch, Kesha and Hailee Steinfeld.

He initially announced in April that he would be running as a Democrat for Congress against Republican U.S. Rep. Ken Calvert before leaving that campaign to focus of running for lieutenant governor.

A few days ago, Myers posted a statement on social media, writing in the caption "California is under attack—and our leaders are silent. So I'm stepping up. I'm running for Lieutenant Governor. Let's fight back, together."

Myers said his platform includes plans to address climate concerns, crime and homelessness. (CNN)

Some South Koreans have criticised the court for being too lenient, accusing celebrities of "having it easy"

K-pop singer jailed three and a half years for rape

South Korean singer Taeil, formerly from the K-pop band NCT, has been sentenced to three years and six months in prison for rape.

Taeil, 31, and two accomplices, named in South Korean reports only as Lee and Hong, admitted in June to taking turns assaulting their victim - a Chinese tourist.

A district judge in Seoul described the crime as "extremely grave", but handed them just half the seven-year sentence requested by prosecutors, noting they were first time offenders.

The court also ordered the three men to complete 40 hours of a treatment programme designed for perpetrators of sexual violence.

The court heard they had met their victim at a bar in the Itaewon district in Seoul.

She became "heavily intoxicated" after drinking with them, the court heard. They then got into a taxi to Lee's house, where the assault happened.

South Korean law describes this specific kind of rape as "aggravated" because it was a group attack, and a "quasi rape", as the victim was unconscious.

Taeil, whose real name is Moon Tae-il, left NCT in August last year when allegations first emerged, although the exact details of the crime were not publicly known at the time.

‘Big Bang Theory’ spinoff ‘Stuart Fails to Save the Universe’ coming to HBO Max

“The Big Bang Theory” universe is growing again.

On Wednesday, Warner Bros. Television and Chuck Lorre Productions announced “Stuart Fails to Save the Universe,” a new series coming to HBO Max.

According to a press release, the new show will center on comic book store owner Stuart Bloom, who is “tasked with restoring reality after he breaks a device built by Sheldon and Leonard, accidentally bringing about a multiverse Armageddon.”

Kevin Sussman played Stuart on the hit comedy “The Big Bang Theory” and will reprise the role on the new show.

The series will also star Lauren Lapkus, Stuart’s girlfriend Denise, Brian Posehn, Stuart’s geologist friend, and John Ross Bowie, as Barry Kripke. All are reprising characters they first played on “The Big Bang Theory.”

A press release adds: “Along the way, they meet alternate-universe versions of characters we’ve come to know and love from ‘The Big Bang Theory.’ As the title implies, things don’t go well.”

Sheldon and Leonard were played by Jim Parsons and Johnny Galecki on the original series, but were not listed in the press release as being among the regular cast in the new show.

Denise (Lauren Lapkus) and Stuart (Kevin Sussman) on “The Big Bang Theory”

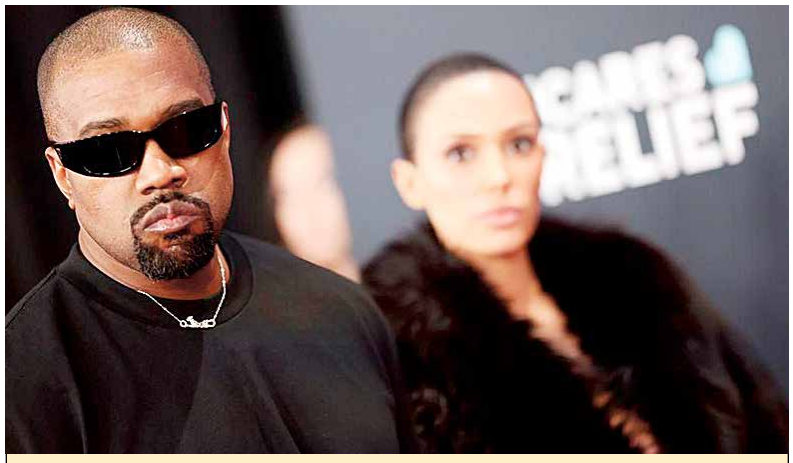

The show will be executive produced by creators Chuck Lorre, Zak Penn and Bill Prady.

“I wanted to do something radical that would take me out of my comfort zone,” Lorre said in a statement. “Something the characters on ‘The Big Bang Theory,’ would have loved, hated, and argued about.”

“The process of writing this show with Chuck and Zak has been damn fun, and I’m certain that joy will come through the screen,” Prady added. “Putting characters we loved from ‘The Big Bang Theory’ into a complex science fiction story with the kind of mythology that those characters love while maintaining the comedic elements is incredibly satisfying.”

“The Big Bang Theory,” about a group of nerdy friends ran from 2007 to May 2019. The first spinoff, “Young Sheldon,” ran for seven seasons and concluded last year. “Georgie & Mandy’s First Marriage,” will debut its second season in the fall.

Kanye West has made himself an outcast in the mainstream music industry

Slovak rap festival featuring Kanye West called off

A rap festival offering what organisers claimed would be the only performance in Europe this year by controversial American rapper Kanye West has been called off.

Organisers of the Rubicon festival in Slovakia announced that the event – planned for next weekend – had been cancelled “due to external pressure and logistical challenges”.

Protest groups had organised a petition against West’s appearance because of antisemitic and pro-Nazi statements he has made in recent years.

Meanwhile, Slovak media revealed the venue was still an unharvested wheat field on the outskirts of Bratislava.

Slovak rap artists began pulling out, followed by one of the two organisers. Finally, West himself - now officially known as Ye - deleted an Instagram post announcing the concert.

The festival’s Instagram account said: “It is with regret that we announce: Rubicon Festival will not take place this year.

The Gilded Age adds Phylicia Rashad for Season 3’s Black Bourgeois storyline

The veteran actress has just been casted in the third season of “The Gilded Age.” The upcoming season will focus on Black bourgeois community.

“We just got more and more interested in the history of the Black bourgeois community at the end of the 19th century,” creator Julian Fellowes told Entertainment Weekly.

“People are not really taught it. They’re taught one vision of that society, and the Black bourgeois community has been left out of it, largely. The more we learned, the more we wanted to put it into the show.”

Denée Benton, an actress on the series who has been there since season 1, shares she was “hungry” for the show to open up and explore stories centered around the “Black world” after working with consultant, Dr Erica Dunbar, for the past two seasons.

“It feels like this garden we’ve been watering since season 1,” she said. “Dr. Dunbar and I have been dreaming about what it could be like for the Black world of the show to expand and take up as much space as the white world of the Gilded Age. This season feels like we’re getting to see all the flowers blossom of that pursuit. It culminated in us getting to speak to family members in Newport who are descendants of families like the Kirklands that have had Black family members in Newport for 11 generations and still have artifacts of their family from that time.”

Phylicia Rashad

Joining Rashad will be Broadway star Jordan Donica as Dr. William Kirkland, Benton’s new love interest, and his parents, played by Rashad and Brian Stokes Mitchell.

‘Fantastic Four’ star Julian McMahon dead at 56

Actor Julian McMahon, one of the two leads of seminal FX television series “Nip/Tuck” who also played Dr. Doom in the “Fantastic Four” movies from the 2000s, has died. He was reportedly 56.

The news was confirmed by a statement on the official “Nip/Tuck” Facebook page, and an additional statement from his wife Kelly McMahon who told Deadline on Friday that her husband “died peacefully this week after a valiant effort to overcome cancer.”

McMahon starred opposite Dylan Walsh in the Ryan Murphy-created “Nip/Tuck” following two upscale plastic surgeons and their exploits. The series ran for six seasons between 2003 and 2010, and was nominated for 18 Primetime Emmys, winning one for best prosthetic makeup.

Concurrently, he played Dr Victor Von Doom in the “Fantastic Four” movies costarring Jessica Alba and Chris Evans from 2005 and 2007. (Dr Doom is the villain soon to be portrayed by Robert Downey Jr. in the upcoming “Avengers: Doomsday.”)

McMahon’s notable additional credits include recurring characters on TV’s “Charmed” and “Profiler.” The Australian-American actor also recently appeared in “FBI: Most Wanted” and Netflix’s “The Residence.”

With a resume of credits that began in the late 1980s, McMahon worked up until recently, with a role in the new Nicolas Cage movie “The Surfer,” out this summer. (CNN)

Nearly 1 in 3 US teens have prediabetes, CDC finds, in 'wake-up call'

About 1 in 3 young people who are 12 to 17 years old have prediabetes, new national data show, putting them at risk not just for type 2 diabetes but also for heart disease and stroke. Developing chronic diseases early in life also heightens their chances for worse outcomes from these conditions.

Experts said the data reflect a concerning rise in obesity among teens, but also noted that not all teens with prediabetes will progress to diabetes.

The new report from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention relied on the long-running National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey, which asked adolescents if they'd ever been diagnosed with diabetes and analyzed results of their fasting blood glucose or hemoglobin A1c tests. Its conclusion: In 2023, an estimated 8.4 million adolescents, or 32.7% of 12- to 17-year-olds, had prediabetes.

"These new prediabetes data among adolescents serve as a wake-up call. Type 2 diabetes is a significant threat to the health of our nation's young people," Christopher Holliday, director of CDC's Division of Diabetes Translation, said in a statement Tuesday. "The good news is it's not too late to change course. Simple lifestyle changes — like healthy eating and staying active — can make a big difference in preventing or delaying type 2 diabetes."

Statistical changes in how the information was gathered and studied make comparisons difficult, but when the methods used this time were applied to the previous estimate from NHANES, the prevalence of prediabetes for 2015 through 2016 in the same age group would have been 28%,

Teens need to eat healthy foods the report says. Previous estimates have been closer to 20%. The new report is based on data from two time periods: 2017 through March 2020, and August 2021 through August 2023.

The trend toward greater prevalence of prediabetes among young people is backed up by evidence from the National Institutes of Health, among other studies. The increase also aligns with trends in new diabetes diagnoses among adults age 18 and older. After declining for more than 10 years, adult rates have begun to climb again, adding up to about 1.5 million new diabetes diagnoses in 2023, the CDC also said, citing the most recent data.

Not every child with prediabetes, as confirmed by blood tests, will go on to develop type 2 diabetes, Meg Bensignor, a pediatric endocrinologist at the University of Minnesota's Center for Pediatric Obesity Medicine, told STAT. She was not involved in the NHANES study. But the higher a BMI or A1C when diagnosed, the more weight gained, and the more adverse social drivers of health a child has, the higher the risk of developing type 2.

"If you have prediabetes, that already tells you that your pancreas and your beta cells specifically are under a lot of stress, and certainly we know that kids with type 2 diabetes lose beta cell function much more quickly than adults," Bensignore said. "I pretty much treat everyone as if they're going to develop type 2 because we don't know, and getting type 2 in kids can be really devastating with a lot of comorbidities early in their life."

Nancy Crimmins, a pediatric endocrinologist at Cincinnati Children's Hospital Medical Center who started a prediabetes clinic at the hospital, emphasized the lack of clarity around who will and who won't move from prediabetes in adolescence to type 2 diabetes. She was not involved in the NHANES study, but pointed out that previous NHANES reports estimated that about 70% of youth with prediabetes go back to normal glycemic measures after puberty. Other studies show a wide range of progression, saying anywhere from 45% to 75% revert back to normal from prediabetes.

"When you look at the sheer numbers who have prediabetes, especially in adolescence, versus how many adolescents have type 2, that number drops off a lot," she told STAT. "One of the huge questions in our field is, can we identify who those kids are who are going to progress to type 2 and who aren't?"

One explanation: Puberty plays a role in prediabetes, Crimmins said. Growth hormone and other hormonal changes make teens more insulin resistant during puberty.

Crimmins still called type 2 diabetes in children a very aggressive disease and an important one to prevent.

Bensignor noted that the CDC report does not distinguish among precursors for type 1, type 2, or genetically related diabetes — something needed to be defined before planning a prevention strategy. Some genetic mutations that lead to diabetes are inherited, and type 1 and type 2 have different causes.

In the much more common type 2 diabetes, beta cells in the pancreas lose the ability to make enough insulin, or the insulin they makes doesn't work properly. In type 1, affecting about 10% of people with diabetes, the immune system mistakenly destroys insulin-producing pancreatic islet cells, meaning they can't make insulin to process glucose into energy.

Distinguishing which type a child has is important in type 1, where not recognizing low insulin is dangerous.

Certain factors prompt testing a child for prediabetes. The American Diabetes Association recommends screening children age 10 and older who have a BMI higher than the 85th percentile for their age, plus one other factor. That includes whether their mother had gestational diabetes or there's a family history of type 2 diabetes. Beyond these risk factors are the social drivers of health, including limited access to healthy food and opportunities to be physically active. Because these social determinants are closely linked to race and ethnicity, screening automatically includes nonwhite children.

Physical examinations can also be key. Darkening and thickening of the skin, skin folds, or skin tags may be signs of a body pumping out high and unhealthy amounts of insulin.

"What we need to be doing is really treating it seriously in all the kids, at the same time not scaring the families that we do see this during a pubertal window," Crimmins said. "It doesn't mean that your child will develop type 2 diabetes in the childhood period."

The field is catching up to a phenomenon that's been developing only in the last 20 to 30 years, Bensignor and Crimmins said. A new NIH-funded effort, called the DISCOVERY trial, seeks to define who among children with prediabetes will develop type 2.

"This data, along with others, just really cements that there needs to be scientific funding of more research to really understand how to best treat kids," Bensignor said. "We just need more research to really understand how to prevent and then also how to effectively treat kids that do develop type 2 diabetes." (Statnews.com)

First malaria treatment for babies approved for use

The first malaria treatment suitable for babies and very young children has been approved for use.

It's expected to be rolled out in African countries within weeks.

Until now there have been no approved malaria drugs specifically for babies.

Instead they have been treated with versions formulated for older children which presents a risk of overdose.

HALF A MILLION DEATHS IN 2023

In 2023 - the year for which the most recent figures are available - malaria was linked to around 597,000 deaths.

Almost all of the deaths were in Africa, and around three quarters of them were children under five years old.

Malaria treatments for children do exist but until now, there was none specifically for the very youngest babies and small children, who weigh less than 4.5kg or around 10lb.

Instead they have been treated with drugs designed for older children.

But that presents risks, as doses for these older children may not be safe for babies, whose liver functions are still developing and whose bodies process medicines differently.

Experts say this has led to what is described as a "treatment gap".

Now a new medicine, developed by the drug company Novartis, has been approved by the Swiss authorities and is likely to be rolled out in regions and countries with the highest rates of malaria within weeks.

Novartis is planning to introduce it on a largely not-for-profit basis.

THE SMALLEST AND MOST VULNERABLE

The company's chief executive, Vas Narasimhan, says this is an important moment.

"For more than three decades, we have stayed the course in the fight against malaria, working relentlessly to deliver scientific

96-year-old shares what she does to keep life vibrant

At 96 years old, Betty Parker is tired of hearing about other people's aches and pains.

Instead, she fills her journal with all the great things she is still doing: picking roses from her garden, reading, playing cards with her regular group and baking pies when she entertains.

OK, she admits that maybe she doesn't quite have the energy to bake pies anymore and should probably buy something from the grocery store next time. Even so, Parker said her 90s have been filled with purpose and connection — something many people struggle with no matter their age.

Healthy behaviours like nutritious eating and strength training are important to living longer, but loneliness and social isolation are also key factors to address to have more years and enjoy them, said California-based gerontologist Dr Kerry Burnight, who is also Parker's daughter.

"Life expectancy generally has improved in the last generation. But we want to make sure that individuals are living good years, as opposed to just living longer," said Dr. John Batsis, a geriatrician and an associate professor at UNC's School of Medicine and Gillings School of Global Public Health in Chapel Hill, North Carolina.

A geriatrician is a medical doctor focusing on the care of older adults, while a gerontologist studies aging from the biological perspective as well as the social and psychological, Burnight said.

There are four factors that Burnight sees as being the most important to getting the most joy out of your longer, healthier years: growing, connecting, adapting and giving. And fortunately, just like you can exercise daily to keep your body healthy, she says you can work out your internal strength to improve your connections and sense of purpose.

START WHENEVER YOU CAN

It's not too early or too late to start creating a life you enjoy.

If you haven't retired yet, it may be a good idea to start thinking about what your days will look like when you stop working, Batsis said.

"The retirement cliff, so to speak, is very difficult for individuals who have been working a lifetime," he added.

It can feel like suddenly you lose everything — a sense of purpose, how you fill your days and who you connect with — when you are no longer going into work every day, especially if you have not made a plan, he said. Instead of making such a drastic change, Batsis advises people to start taking up hobbies and activities you'd like to do in retirement while you are still working.

If you have already retired, you can find opportunities to build new things you love, Burnight said. If you have always wanted to publish a book, 80 isn't too old to start writing. In fact, you may still have a lot of time ahead of you to invest in your passions, she said.

"It's not too late at all. In fact, it's the perfect time to really lean into and redefine it," said Burnight, author of the upcoming book "Joyspan: The Art and Science of Thriving in Life's Second Half."

Don't stop growing

Daily crossword puzzles or sudoku are a good way to engage your brain, but to stay cognitively sharp and increase the enjoyment of your older years it is important to do difficult things, Burnight said.

"New experiences activate neuro plasticity … that is our brain's ability to keep growing," she said. "If you do the same things you've always done, you're really not setting yourself up for continued growth."

One of Batsis' patients took up golf after he retired, but he also started playing a musical instrument guitar. It wasn't something he had ever done before, and he didn't consider himself musically inclined, but the activity opened up a whole new world for him, Batsis said.

Now, the patient plays the guitar and also attends local concerts that he might not have otherwise, he added.

Batsis recommends trying to find a hobby that will keep you physically active. The less you move, the weaker you get, and so he said that finding something that disrupts a sedentary pattern can be helpful in keeping more activities available to you as you get older.

The key, however, is to find something you enjoy — not to push yourself to activities you think you are supposed to do in your older age, Batsis said. If you never liked books, you probably won't be motivated to become a reader in retirement, he added.

"Individuals need to find something that is of interest to them, because the more interesting it is to them, the more they're going to be willing to kind of engage in that type of activity." Batsis said.

For caregivers, Burnight cautions against doing for your loved ones anything that they can do for themselves, which varies depending on their skill set or physical limitations. Doing challenging things is important and helpful, she said.

DIVERSIFY YOUR SOCIAL PORTFOLIO

About once a month, Parker meets with a group she calls "the youngs" to play canasta, which she taught them.

"The youngs" are a group of women in their 60s whom she met through her daughter-in-law. Although they are much younger than her, Parker said she values having a diverse group of friends. That is especially true as she has outlived her husband and other close connections, she said.

"Like how we diversify our financial portfolio, socially we want to have friends of different ages, friends from your neighborhood, as well as friends from the past," she said.

If you need connection with more people from your past, Burnight recommends using social media to reach out to people whom you might have lost touch with over the years. People are usually happy to hear from an old friend, she said.

Even small interactions with a neighbor or at your coffee shop can often lead to more meaningful relationships, she said.

Her most important piece of advice is to be the friend, Burnight said. Loneliness is dangerous to longevity, so investing in connection is important.

"You need to be the one to call to make a plan or to remember a birthday, or to sit by somebody's hospital bed or to drive them to their chemo," she said.

FINDING JOY AND PURPOSE

While Parker has a lot of joy in her 90s, it hasn't come without a need to adapt, she said.

She had to give up tennis years ago, which she misses, and now she has to use a walker to get around sometimes, she said. But those changes haven't prevented her from laughing with her family, spending time in her yard or even being in a local parade for the Fourth of July holiday, Parker said.

"We are always going to have changing circumstances, and growing older brings a lot of challenge," Burnight said. "Instead of just denying that or saying, 'Oh, my life can't be great now that I've had these things,' the ones who age well are the ones that adapt, meaning they're able to accept and even embrace change."

"The way that you adapt largely is recognising that it isn't wrong that you're going to have tough stuff. It's how you're going to respond to that tough stuff," she said.

Research has suggested that how you think about aging profoundly impacts how you actually age, she said.

"People who believe that aging is a time of continued growth live 7.5 years longer than those who think, 'Oh, I'm old. I'm going to retire and just go knit with the ladies,'" Burnight said. Unless, of course, you enjoy knitting or want to pick it up as a new hobby.

Instead, she recommends turning your attention to all you have to give. Evidence also suggests that people who give report higher levels of joy, purpose and longevity, Burnight said.

Sounds like a lot to do all at once? Don't worry. You can start small.

Maybe it is delivering a lemon from your tree to a friend or offering to watch your neighbors' young children while they run errands, she said. Even creating art, planting a garden or giving someone who is sick a call is an act of giving that can give you purpose, Burnight said. (BBC)

Does exercise really improve mental health?

Research often points to exercise as a good way to boost mental health, but a recent study from the University of Georgia suggests that it's not just physical movement that affects mental health.

It's how, where and why you exercise that makes the difference.

"Historically, physical activity research has focused on how long someone exercises for or how many calories were burned," said Patrick O'Connor, co-author of the study and a professor in the Mary Frances Early College of Education's Department of Kinesiology. "The 'dose' of exercise has been the dominant way researchers have tried to understand how physical activity might influence mental health, while often ignoring whether those minutes were spent exercising with a friend or as part of a game."

While research shows that leisure-time physical activity — like going for a run, taking a yoga class or biking for fun — correlates with better mental health outcomes, these benefits may vary significantly depending on the environment and circumstances surrounding the activity, according to the researchers.

To analyse these factors, the researchers reviewed three types of studies. These included large-scale epidemiological studies that examined health patterns in populations, randomized controlled trials where some groups received exercise treatments and others did not, and a much smaller but growing set of investigations into contextual factors.

A new UGA study shows that the mental health benefits of physical activity can vary significantly depending on the environment and circumstances surrounding the activity

EXERCISE AND MENTAL HEALTH

Multiple studies found that people who engage in regular leisure-time physical activity tend to report lower levels of depression and anxiety. But it's less clear for other forms of activity like cleaning the house or working for a lawn care company. The context may matter as much as the intensity or amount of physical activity.

"For example, if a soccer player runs down the field and kicks the game-winning ball, their mental health is fantastic," O'Connor said. "In contrast, if you do the exact same exercise but miss the goal and people are blaming you, you likely feel very differently. Anecdotes such as these show how context matters even when people are performing a similar exercise dose."

Larger- and longer-term controlled studies are needed to make a compelling case whether exercise does, or does not, truly impact mental health." —Patrick O'Connor, College of Education

Numerous randomized controlled trials also showed that adopting regular exercise routines boosted mental health, especially for individuals with existing mental health disorders. However, these studies were typically based on small, short-term and homogenous samples, so the results likely aren't generalizable to larger, more diverse groups.

"The average effects on mental health are small across all the randomized controlled studies of exercise, and that's partly because most of the studies focused on people who were not depressed or anxious — you do get bigger effects in those studies," added O'Connor. "We're communicating to scientists that larger- and longer-term controlled studies are needed to make a compelling case whether exercise does, or does not, truly impact mental health."

WHY CONTEXT MATTERS

Where the evidence is thinnest — but potentially most important — is in understanding contextual factors. The same physical activity can feel very different depending on who the activity was done with, as well as where, when and how.

Context can range from peer dynamics and instructor style to external conditions like weather or time of day. "If you're outside and it's hot, and you're having to walk to work, that's part of the context," he added. "Or if you go and take a group exercise class — some instructors you really like, and some you don't. So, that's also part of the context.

"If we're trying to help people's mental health with exercise, then not only do we need to think about the dose and the mode, we also need to ask: What is the context?" O'Connor said.

For O'Connor, the takeaway is clear. It's not just movement that matters. It's the meaning, the setting and the experience surrounding the activity that determines the impact of exercise on mental health.

Co-authors of the study include Eduardo Bustamante of the University of Illinois Chicago; Angelique Brellenthin of Iowa State University; and David Brown, who recently retired from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. (News.uga.edu) breakthroughs where they are needed most.

"Together with our partners, we are proud to have gone further to develop the first clinically proven malaria treatment for newborns and young babies, ensuring even the smallest and most vulnerable can finally receive the care they deserve."

The drug, known as Coartem Baby or Riamet Baby in some countries, was developed by Novartis in collaboration with the Medicines for Malaria Venture (MMV), a Swiss-based not-for-profit organisation initially backed by the British, Swiss and Dutch Governments, as well as the World Bank and the Rockefeller Foundation.

Malaria drugs for children do exist, but there are no treatments specifically for babies

Eight African nations also took part in the assessment and trials of the drug and they are expected to be among the first to access it.

Martin Fitchet, CEO of MMV, says this is another important step on the road towards ending the huge toll taken by malaria.

"Malaria is one of the world's deadliest diseases, particularly among children. But with the right resources and focus, it can be eliminated.

"The approval of Coartem Baby provides a necessary medicine with an optimised dose to treat an otherwise neglected group of patients and offers a valuable addition to the antimalarial toolbox."

Dr Marvelle Brown, associate professor at the University of Hertfordshire's School of Health, Medicine and Life Sciences, says this should be seen as a major breakthrough in saving the lives of babies and young children.

"The death rate for malarial infections, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa is extremely high - over 76% of deaths occur in children under five years old.

"Increase in death from malaria is further compounded in babies born with sickle cell disease, primarily due to a weak immune system.

"From a public health perspective, Novartis making this not-for-profit can help with reducing inequality in access to healthcare." (BBC)

Haliburton averaged 18.6 points, 9.2 assists, 3.5 rebounds and 1.4 steals in 73 games during the 24-25 regular season

Injured Haliburton to miss 25-26 NBA season

Indiana Pacers star Tyrese Haliburton will miss the 2025-26 NBA season after having surgery to repair a torn right Achilles tendon.

The 25-year-old had sustained the injury during the first quarter of the decisive game seven of the NBA Championship play-off finals against the Oklahoma City Thunder last month.

Haliburton fell down without any contact as he attempted to drive to the basket and was in obvious distress as he was helped from the court during the game that the Pacers lost 103-91 to end their hopes of a first NBA title.

Confirming the point guard's lengthy absence, Pacers president Kevin Pritchard said he hoped Haliburton "will be back better than ever".

"The surgery went well," Pritchard told WISH-TV.

"He will not play next year though. We would not jeopardise that now. So don't get any hopes up that he will play."

A two-time All-Star, Haliburton averaged 18.6 points, 9.2 assists, 3.5 rebounds and 1.4 steals in 73 games during the 24-25 regular season and 14 points, 5.9 assists and 4.6 rebounds during the NBA Finals.

He had played the decider against the Thunder despite suffering a calf strain in game five of the finals.

Haliburton became the third high-profile player to suffer a ruptured Achilles tendon in the play-offs, following the Boston Celtics' Jayson Tatum and the Milwaukee Bucks' Damian Lillard.

Messi has scored eight goals in his last four MLS games

Messi creates MLS record

Lionel Messi became the first player to score multiple goals in four straight MLS games as he helped Inter Miami beat New England Revolution 2-1.

The Argentina forward scored twice in the first half - his fourth consecutive double - to take his tally to 14 in 15 MLS games this season.

Messi started his scoring streak in May, starring in a 4-2 win over Montreal and a 5-1 victory over Columbus, before competing at the Club World Cup.

The 38-year-old scored once in four games as Miami were beaten by PSG in the Club World Cup last 16, before returning to the MLS with a 4-1 victory against Montreal last week.

"I always say Leo is a special player. For me, the best player that has played this sport in history," said Miami head coach Javier Mascherano.

"So, it's unbelievable because he continues doing things that maybe many, many years ago, we cannot see at this moment. But at the end, he's a special player, we are lucky to have him."

Messi put his side 1-0 up in the 27th minute with a left-footed strike inside the area before doubling the score 11 minutes later, curling home following a long through ball from Sergio Busquets.

Carles Gil got one back in the 79th minute for Revolution but Miami held on to climb to fifth in the Eastern Conference.

Messi's scoring streak is the latest of a number of MLS records broken by the eight-time Ballon d'Or winner.

He holds the league record for most assists in a single game (five) and most goal contributions in a single game (six), which were both recorded during a 6-2 win against New York Red Bulls last May.

His 58 goal contributions is also a record for Miami. (BBC)

Taylor 'sick of Serrano's whining' before trilogy bout

Katie Taylor says she is "sick of Amanda Serrano's whining" before their third fight on Friday at Madison Square Garden in New York.

Taylor, 39, has two wins over Serrano, but the Puerto Rican says she believes she won both bouts and complained about the Irishwoman's use of her head in their rematch in November.

Speaking at a news conference, Taylor appeared unperturbed about her rival's opinions.

"The fact is that I am 2-0 against her," Taylor, the defending light-welterweight undisputed champion, said.

"Opinions are opinions, but facts are facts, and you can't get away from those facts. And, yeah, I guess I'm just sick of the complaining and whining from her team.

Serrano suffered a gruesome cut over her right eye during their second fight in November

"I'm going into this fight unbeaten against Amanda Serrano, and I plan to stay on being against her."

It's back to the scene of their first meeting at MSG in 2022 where Serrano and Taylor became the first female boxing headliners at the iconic venue.

This is another first for the venue as the eight-fight card is all-female - five of those unified world-title bouts - and populated by the cream of the crop including Britons Ellie Scotney, Chantelle Cameron and Savannah Marshall.

Promoted by Jake Paul's MVP Promotions, it was a naturally brash and in-your-face final news gathering with a free T-shirt for everyone in the audience, but strip it all back and we are left with two fighters who have served up two classics.

During the news conference, MVP CEO Nakisa Bidarian announced there was a $250,000 performance bonus on offer for the best performance or fight of the night.

Bidarian also predicted the Serrano-Taylor bout would be the most watched combat sports event of the year so far, with Netflix streaming their second boxing event after broadcasting Jake Paul v Mike Tyson in November.

Taylor's undisputed light-welterweight crown will be on the line once again, but this fight will have a 9st 10lbs weight limit at the behest of Serrano and her team.

The Irishwoman was also nonplussed about being announced on stage first - traditionally reserved for the challenger - branding the hoopla and pre-fight rituals as "nonsense".

Having previously shared 20 rounds of all-out battle it's not exactly a shock that some needle has built, with Serrano far from impressed by the scorecards from their second meeting in Texas last year.

Serrano, 36, fought most of that contest battling a massive cut above her eye.

Mexico beat US to defend Gold Cup title

Mexico won their 10th title this week

Mexico fought back from conceding an early goal to beat Mauricio Pochettino's United States and defend their Gold Cup title in Houston, Texas.

Former Tottenham and Chelsea manager Pochettino saw his team gain a fourth-minute lead through Crystal Palace defender Chris Richards. He headed in from Sebastian Berhalter's free-kick, with the ball bouncing down off the underside of the crossbar and just crossing the line.

But the US advantage only lasted 23 minutes as Fulham striker Raul Jimenez equalised with a first-time shot on the turn into the roof of the net from eight yards out, following Marcel Ruiz's intelligent reverse pass.

Jimenez celebrated the goal by sitting on the turf with a 'Diogo J 20' shirt in front of him as a tribute to his former Wolves team-mate Diogo Jota, who died in a car crash on Thursday aged 28.

Mexico dominated the second half and got the winner in the 77th minute with a diving header from Edson Alvarez, although it had originally being ruled out for offside before the video assistant referee showed the West Ham defender was onside.

The Gold Cup featured 16 nations, 15 from North and Central America as well as Saudi Arabia, who had been invited to compete. All but one of the matches have been held in the United States, with the other one staged in Vancouver, Canada.

Pochettino took Tottenham to the Champions League final in 2019 and had been appointed boss of the US national team in September 2024, four months after being dismissed by Chelsea.

Although the final ended in defeat, this tournament has been a welcome return to form for the US after they had suffered four successive home defeats between March and June – against Panama, Canada, Turkey and a 4-0 thrashing by Switzerland.

Pochettino had guided the US to wins over Trinidad and Tobago, Saudi Arabia, Haiti, Costa Rica and Guatemala to take them to the final, but they could not take the final step.

They looked on course to win the competition with their early goal, but Mexico recovered from a poor start to secure a deserved victory and regain the trophy they had won two years ago.

Mexico had almost 60% of possession and dominated the stats with 12-0 corners and 16-6 shots, with eight of those efforts on target, while the US only had three on target.

American goalkeeper Matt Freese made six saves to keep his side in the match, but the US could not hold on for extra time as Freese was beaten for a second time with Alvarez's header with 13 minutes remaining.

This was the 18th hosting of the Gold Cup, and either the United States or Mexico has won every tournament, apart from in 2000 when Canada took the title.

Mexico have now won it 10 times with the United States having seven successes. (BBC)

Ireland's Campher takes five wickets in five balls

Ireland international Curtis Campher has become the first male player to take five wickets from five balls in a professional match.

The all-rounder, 26, did so for Munster Reds in their Inter-Provincial T20 Trophy win over the North-West Warriors in Dublin.

The Warriors were chasing 189 but collapsed from 87-5 to 88 all out thanks to Campher's sensational spell.

The Reds captain's first wicket came when he bowled Jared Wilson with the penultimate delivery of the 12th over. Graham Hume was then trapped lbw to conclude the over.

Returning in the 14th, the South Africa-born pace bowler completed the hat-trick when his Ireland international team-mate Andy McBrine was caught at deep mid-wicket.

Robbie Millar was then caught behind before Josh Wilson was bowled for the final wicket.

Campher, who previously took four wickets from four balls against the Netherlands at the 2021 T20 World Cup, was playing his second match since returning from a finger injury that caused him to miss Ireland's ODI and T20 series against West Indies this year.

Curtis Campher had previously took four wickets from four balls against the Netherlands at the 2021 T20 World Cup

Zimbabwe Women all-rounder Kelis Ndhlovu previously took five wickets in five balls in a domestic under-19 T20 last year. (BBC)

Julian Cash and Lloyd Glasspool are in fine form, having won the Wimbledon warm-up tournaments at Queen's and Eastbourne

GB pair Cash and Glasspool reach men's doubles final

Julian Cash and Lloyd Glasspool became the first all-British pairing to reach the men's doubles final at Wimbledon in the Open era with victory over fourth seeds Marcel Granollers and Horacio Zeballos.

They served a remarkable 11 aces to their opponents' none to win 6-3 6-4 on a hot day on Court One.

Cash, 28, and 31-year-old Glasspool are the first all-British pair to reach the final since Mike Davies and Bobby Wilson in 1960.

It comes after they made history last month as the first all-British partnership to win the men's doubles title at Queen's in the Open era - which started in 1968 when professionals were allowed to take part in Grand Slam tournaments.

They followed that up with victory at Eastbourne and had already knocked out defending Wimbledon champions Henry Patten and Harri Heliovaara.

They will meet David Pel of the Netherlands and Australia's Rinky Hijikata in the final on Saturday.

Fifth seeds Cash and Glasspool, who are chasing their first Grand Slam trophy as a pairing, were efficient across the two sets and converted their two break points to seal victory.

Britons have enjoyed success in the men's doubles in recent years with Patten winning the title alongside Finnish partner Heliovaara last year and Neal Skupski doing so with Dutch partner Wesley Koolhof the year before. (BBC)

Semenya's right to a fair hearing violated - ECHR

Caster Semenya's right to a fair hearing was violated by the Swiss Federal Supreme Court when she lost a 2020 appeal against World Athletics regulations that effectively barred her from competing, Europe's top court has ruled.

The double 800m Olympic champion won a partial victory at the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) in her long legal battle over athletics' sex eligibility rules.

Semenya, 34, was born with differences of sexual development (DSD) and has been unable to compete in the 800m since World Athletics brought in rules in 2019 restricting testosterone levels for track events from 400m up to the mile.

Caster Semenya

The South African middle distance runner believes World Athletics has shown discrimination against athletes with DSD by insisting they reduce testosterone levels in order to be eligible.

Speaking to BBC Sport after the verdict, Semenya said: "This is bigger than we ever thought. I don't think this is about competition. It's about human rights. It's about the protection of the athletes.

"My role is to become a voice for those who cannot speak out."

Athletics' governing body insists the rules, which in 2023 were expanded to cover all female track and field events, are needed to ensure fair competition and to protect the female category.

Semenya was the Olympic champion over 800m in 2012 and 2016.

In 2019, she unsuccessfully challenged World Athletics' rules at the Switzerland-based Court of Arbitration for Sport (Cas).

In July 2023 the ECHR ruled in favour of Semenya in a case related to testosterone levels in female athletes.

The case at the ECHR was not against sporting bodies or DSD rules, but specifically against Switzerland's government for not protecting Semenya's rights and dates back to a Swiss Supreme Court ruling from 2020.

Switzerland's government requested the matter be referred to the ECHR's Grand Chamber, which has now found that the Swiss ruling "had not satisfied the requirement of particular rigour" under Article 6 (right to a fair hearing) of the European Convention on Human Rights.

The judges said the Swiss court's review "had fallen short" of that requirement.

However, the Grand Chamber found Semenya's complaints under Articles 8 (right to respect for private life), 13 (right to an effective remedy) and 14 (prohibition of discrimination) inadmissible as they "did not fall within Switzerland's jurisdiction".

As the case concerns the Swiss government and not World Athletics, it will not immediately affect the current restrictions on DSD athletes.

Semenya said the outcome was "overwhelming", adding: "For someone who has been waiting for over 15 years, to be able to hear that, I mean, you know, you feel heard, it's a beautiful feeling.

"The past is the past. I mean, we focus on the future. I'll say at the moment, I'll say reborn. And, feel fulfilled."

Decisions made by the ECHR's Grand Chamber are not open to appeal.

Semenya's case could now go back to the Swiss federal court in Lausanne.

The athlete's lawyer, Schona Jolly, said they needed time to process the ruling before deciding on the next move, but told BBC Sport Semenya "has been vindicated".

"As of today, the governance of international sport needs to sit up and take notice of an athlete's fundamental rights," Jolly said.

"It's not possible to put this aside and say 'the substantive rights of the athlete don't matter'. They firmly do."

World Athletics declined to comment. (BBC)

The deal for Smith would see her become the most expensive signing in women's football

Arsenal agree world record £1m fee with Liverpool for Smith

Arsenal have had a world record bid in excess of £1m accepted by Women's Super League rivals Liverpool for forward Olivia Smith.

The current world record is the £900,000 Chelsea paid to sign United States defender Naomi Girma from San Diego Wave in January.

The deal for 20-year-old Canada international Smith is subject to a medical and personal terms being agreed.

Smith joined Liverpool from Portuguese side Sporting last summer and scored seven times in 20 WSL appearances in her debut season.

As reported by The Guardian, external, Smith joined Liverpool for a club-record fee believed to be just over £200,000 in July 2024 from the Portuguese club and still has multiple years left on her contract.

Arsenal have also added Chloe Kelly to their ranks on a free transfer from Manchester City, alongside former Liverpool left-back Taylor Hinds.

She has played 18 times for Canada, scoring four goals.

Liverpool, who finished seventh in the WSL last season, view the sale of Smith as a major opportunity to strengthen their squad by reinvesting the transfer fee.

They are currently without a manager since sacking Matt Beard in February, with former Manchester City boss Gareth Taylor the leading candidate to take over. (BBC)

Lara said I should have broken his record - Mulder

Wiaan Mulder says Brian Lara told him he should have tried to break the record for the highest individual Test score instead of declaring on himself.

South Africa captain Mulder made 367 not out against Zimbabwe, but opted to declare 33 runs short of the 400 not out Lara made for West Indies against England in 2004.

At the time, Mulder said: "Brian Lara keeping that record is exactly the way it should be."

Following the Proteas' massive defeat of Zimbabwe in the second Test, Mulder told SuperSport: "I've chatted a little bit to Brian Lara. He said to me I'm creating my own legacy and I should have gone for it.

"He said records are there to be broken and he wishes if I'm ever in that position again I go and score more than what he had."

Mulder's 367 is the fifth-highest individual score in Test history, the best by a South African and the best by any batter playing in an away Test.

Wiann Mulder's 367 not out is the fifth-highest individual score in Test history

His effort took South Africa to 626-5 at lunch on day two of the second Test in Bulawayo. A tilt on Lara's record would not have negatively impacted the visitors' push for victory, which was eventually completed on the third day.

Mulder was captaining South Africa for the first time following injuries to Temba Bavuma and Keshav Maharaj. He chose to declare following consultation with coach Shukri Conrad, who told him, "Let the legends keep the really big scores".

Salt Rakers swimmers register solid showing at Florida swim meet

– Martin and Jules win medals

The Salt Rakers Aquatic Club participated in the 2025 SPA Seminole Sunrise Lanes Swim Meet, held at the North Shore Pool in St. Petersburg from July 4–6.

The three-day event provided an important opportunity for swimmers to compete in a long-course setting, and for many representing the Salt Rakers, it marked one of their most productive meets to date.

Athletes from across Florida competed in morning and afternoon sessions in a 50-metre, 10-lane pool equipped with Colorado electronic timing. The meet placed strong emphasis on skill development, race execution, and individual time improvement—all areas where Salt Rakers swimmers made noticeable progress.

Among the standout performers was Ezekiel Martin, who placed second in the Boys 11–12 50m Butterfly and earned additional top-five finishes in Backstroke and Breaststroke. Fellow teammate Kian Jules secured two third-place finishes in the Butterfly events, while younger swimmers like Kailey Jules and Isabelle Martin achieved promising time drops in the Freestyle, suggesting potential for future success in their age group.

Daniel Martin had one of the most significant personal gains of the meet, lowering his Butterfly time by over 24 seconds. Kymani Delancy exceeded his personal target in the 50m Freestyle, dropping nearly 12 seconds, and Lorenzi Smith posted an impressive 13.04-second reduction in his seed time.

The meet also featured consistent improvements from swimmers like Ethan Williams, who earned a first-place finish in the 100m Freestyle along with solid placements in three other events, and Samuel Martin, who trimmed several seconds off his Backstroke time. Across all categories, Salt Rakers swimmers showed dedication, preparation, and increasing comfort with competitive pacing.

The team was led by Head Coach Bennett Williams and Assistant Coaches Lincoln Martin and Bradley Jules.

GK Foods register seven-wicket victory against Beaches

GK Foods registered a seven-wicket win over Beaches when action continued last weekend in the Turks and Caicos Islands Cricket Association (TCICA) T20 competition at the Downtown Ballpark in Providenciales.

Beaches lost the toss and were asked to take first strike. They made a steady start, with Jerome Daley and Earl Henry putting on 53 runs for the first wicket. However, when Henry (14 runs, 2x4s) was dismissed by Rajakumar Kasi, the batting faltered and wickets began to tumble.

Daley, measured in his stroke play, top-scored with 64 runs, including 11 fours and a six. His efforts kept the scoreboard ticking, but the remaining batters struggled against a disciplined GK Foods bowling attack, and Beaches were restricted to a run-a-ball 120 for 6.

Ariharan Kuthalingam was impressive, finishing with figures of 2–17 from 3.1 overs, while Kasi supported well with 2–40 from four overs.

Chasing 121, GK Foods lost opener Vijay Daniel (0) to Daley, and Henry accounted for Prabakaran Paulraj (14). However, the Kuthalingam brothers soon took control. Ariharan made a brisk 28 (4x4s, 1x6), before Ganesan and Nagarajan guided the side home in 11.3 overs with unbeaten knocks.

GK Foods continue to play quality cricket

Ganesan struck a match-winning 35 (4x4s, 1x6), while Nagarajan contributed 12 (2x4s).

April and Wu Nolan after winning the mixed doubles

April Thirumalaiyandi and Coach Reinaldo Rivera Garcia

April Thirumalaiyandi shines on global stage with historic tennis win

– young TCI athlete earns medals at world-class junior tournament

Ten-year-old tennis standout April Thirumalaiyandi has made history for the Turks and Caicos Islands, delivering a breakthrough performance at the prestigious "Little Mo" International Tournament held at the US Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs.

Competing in the under-11 category, April earned third place in singles and captured first place in mixed doubles, partnering with Wu Nolan of the United States.

The tournament, widely regarded as one of the top junior tennis events in the world, drew elite players from over 75 countries and has previously launched the careers of stars like Coco Gauff, Andy Roddick, Madison Keys and Leylah Fernandez.

April, a Grade 5 student at Provo Primary School, trains under coach Reinaldo Rivera Garcia at the TCI Tennis Academy. Known for her naturally aggressive style, she plays right-handed and regularly competes against adult players in Providenciales due to the limited pool of competitive juniors in the territory.

Garcia described her as a peak performer and said she has no competition on the island—not just because of her talent, but because of her mentality. He said that during the school year, she trains with impressive dedication: three hours daily, 17 hours weekly and 68 hours monthly, with training increasing to 88 hours per month during school breaks.

"Her love for the sport fuels her consistent progress. With an advanced technique that combines power, control and tactical variety, she's able to play aggressively while conserving energy. Her serve, backhand and volley are already standout weapons."

Garcia noted that April's game stood out in the US due to her tactical dominance, especially her powerful serve and backhand, which were instrumental in both singles and doubles. "Her serve-and-volley strategy proved highly effective in doubles play, and her mental toughness was evident in every match. These results are no accident."

The competition was fierce at "Little Mo". April had to keep her composure as she fought back to win 7–5 after being down 2–5 in the second set, having lost the first 4–6. In the end, she battled through to win the tiebreaker 10–7 against US player Amina Doumbia, who normally competes in the 12-and-under girls category on the international circuit.

After her win, she was interviewed by the press and said: "I'm really pleased with how I played. I felt in control for most of the match, and my serve was working really well, which helped me a lot."

She noted that breaking her opponent's serve gave her the confidence to build momentum in the clash.

"I focused on my own game and tried not to get too caught up in their strengths. I had a game plan and stuck to it, which paid off… Every match is a learning experience. My coach and my parents will review the match and see where I can improve, but overall I'm happy with my progress."

April intends to keep representing TCI in tennis

Garcia added that her coaching team will now focus on developing her forehand, slice and drop shots.

"April's journey is just beginning, and with her discipline and passion, the future looks very bright," he told the Weekly News.

April's father, Andy Kuthalingam, and her uncles—Ganesan, Nagarajan and Ariharan—are all active cricket players in the Turks and Caicos Islands, and she has been involved in various hand–eye coordination sports for many years.

Although she was born in India, April is committed to representing the TCI in the future as she continues her path toward professional tennis.
